Siege of Adrianople Is Begun Under Lead of Bulgarians

LONDON, Oct. 21.—Sweeping victories over the Turks are being won all along the line by the Bulgarians. A Sofia telegram received this afternoon states that the Turks have been put to flight at every point on the frontier where the Bulgarians attacked, abandoning arms and ammunition and provisions. The entire Bulgarian army is on the move, driving back the Turkish forces.

SOFIA, Oct. 21.—Bulgarian troops captured the western forts guarding Adrianople late today by a bayonet attack, according to a dispatch received from army headquarters.

VIENNA, Oct. 21.—Adrianople, the biggest and most important city in European Turkey, was placed under siege by the Bulgarian army today.

In three columns the Bulgarian army moved upon Adrianople from the north, driving back the Turks from the outer works.

TURKS READY FOR FIERCE BATTLE

The battle of Adrianople, which is expected to be one of the deciding conflicts of the Balkan war, is looked for within a few days. Dispatches from the front indicated that the Turks would not passively submit to being besieged, but would move out and give battle to the Bulgarian army before it was reinforced.

Heavy Fighting to North.

Heavy fighting has been going on north of Adrianople for more than thirty-six hours. Fighting with great bravery, the Bulgarians carried three hills before the city. The hills command important points. One of these villages, Malkotch, was set on fire by the Turks before they retreated. The Turks also spiked most of their cannon.

At some points, however, the advance of Czar Ferdinand's army was so rapid that ammunition and provisions could not be destroyed and these were captured by the Bulgarians.

Czar Ferdinand is directing the operations of his army in person. He has moved his headquarters farther to the front and will personally direct the siege.

The way to Adrianople was opened when the Bulgarians captured Mustapha Pacha, a small town to the northwest of Adrianople, which was considered the key to the bigger city.

It is estimated that there are about 250,000 men in the Bulgarian army before Adrianople. There are less than

T. F. RYAN GAVE $500,000 FOR PARKER IN 1904

WASHINGTON, Oct. 21. — Thomas Fortune Ryan, the New York financier, testified before the Senatorial committee investigating campaign contributions today that he had contributed about $500,000 to keep the Democratic National campaign from collapsing in 1904. He said that he took this action although he was unalterably opposed to the nomination of Alton B. Parker, and had favored the nomination of Arthur Pue Gorman of Maryland.

Today was the first time that Mr. Ryan has ever appeared as a witness in a Senatorial investigation. He was the first witness called.

George W. Perkins, former partner of J. Pierpont Morgan and a leading supporter of Theodore Roosevelt, was the second witness, Mr. Ryan's testimony being brief.

Ryan told the committee he was engaged in agricultural pursuits in Virginia and then volunteered a statement of his connection with the 1904 campaign.

Paid Committee's Debts.

"I went to St. Louis," he said, "as a delegate from Virginia in 1904. Judge Parker was a candidate for the Presidency at that time, and his friends sought to enlist me in his campaign. But I opposed his nomination, being in favor of Senator Gorman. Judge Parker was nominated in St. Louis, but I took no part in aiding his nomination and furnished him with no campaign funds.

"After the committee were organized in New York I made the national party a contribution of $50,000. Later I contributed to the national party small sums up to $100,000. Toward the end of the campaign members of the national committee came to me when it was perfectly apparent that Judge Parker could not be elected, and told me that the campaign would collapse unless they had financial aid.

"In the interests of the Democratic party, just at the close of the campaign, so that the party workers through the country who were trying to keep the party together would have the aid they thought necessary, I contributed about $250,000 and paid the debts of the committee so that

COL. ROOSEVELT QUITS CHICAGO FOR OYSTER BAY

FORT WAYNE, Ind., Oct. 21.—The following formal bulletin was issued when Colonel Roosevelt arrived here today:

Colonel Roosevelt is resting well and is very comfortable.
(Signed)
DR. ALEXANDER LAMBERT.
DR. SCURRY.
J. TERRELL.

GARY, Ind., Oct. 21.—A great crowd greeted Theodore Roosevelt this morning when he arrived here on the way to Oyster Bay. The Colonel was dressed, but was lying down as the train pulled in.

CHICAGO, Oct. 21.—The following bulletin on Colonel Roosevelt's condition was issued at 7:10 a. m. today:

Pulse, temperature and respiration normal. Wound still discharging serum. Less inflammation. Point of bullet location sensitive to pressure. Position of bullet now distinctly located. General condition satisfactory.
(Signed) MURPHY.
BEVAN.
TERRELL.
LAMBERT.
McCauley.

CHICAGO, Oct. 21.—Twelve hours less than one week from the time he was shot by John Schrank in Milwaukee, Colonel Theodore Roosevelt today left Chicago for his home at Oyster Bay, N. Y., still carrying the bullet fired into his body.

For six days he has lain in Mercy Hospital. For three days he has been impatient to start for home.

"So we are going at last!" he remarked as the final preparations for the trip were made. "I am glad. It's been the longest week I ever spent in my life."

With no escort of police the stricken ex-President was taken to the station and placed aboard his private car on the Pennsylvania train leaving for New York at 8:15 o'clock.

Elaborate preparations were made to prevent any other attempts against his life. Police surrounded the ambulance in which he made the trip to the station. Others were on the top of the lower buildings along the route to prevent unexpected attacks from points of vantage.

Dr. Lambert preceded Roosevelt to the ambulance. The Colonel walked from the hospital door to the conveyance. His step was firm and steady. Drs. Murphy and Terrell followed the Colonel.

Colonel Roosevelt admitted today for the first time that he had suffered pain. In speaking of it he coined another characteristic phrase.

"It is almost worth while," he said, "to be in pain for the pleasure that comes with relief."

HALTS PLAYING OF TENNIS ON SUNDAY

PROVIDENCE, Oct. 21.—The Rev. Dr. Martin D. Kneeland of Boston has started a crusade against Sabbath desecration on the exclusive East Side. Twice on Sunday he complained to the police and tennis playing on the courts at Blackstone Park was stopped. Today he addressed the union ministers' meeting and told the clergymen what he thought of conditions he had found. Dr. Kneeland is general secretary of the Lord's Day League of New England. He came here to launch a campaign for better enforcement of the Sunday laws.

TO ARGUE FOR WOOD'S HOLE FISH HATCHERY

Assistant United States District Attorney Garland will argue before the United States Circuit Court of Appeals, Wednesday, to save the property at Wood's Hole for a government fish hatchery. Henry H. Fay and others were given an adverse decision in the United States District Court in a suit to deprive the government of the property on the grounds that the conditions of a deed given by an ancestor named Fay have not been observed by the United States. The appeal before the court now is from the writ of entry directed by the lower court in behalf of the United States.

BECKER JURY CLOSELY

NEW YORK, Oct. 21.—Extraordinary precautions are being taken to prevent any tampering with jurors in the trial of Police Lieutenant Charles A. Becker for the murder of Herman Rosenthal, it became known today when the third day of the session began.

The suspicious actions of a man believed to be a "jury fixer" about the court have been worrying District Attorney Whitman, detectives have for several days been keeping close watch on a man formerly well known about the courts. In other words he was credited with taking a significant interest in the influences that might affect prospective jurors.

The District Attorney himself saw several things recently and had others reported to him, suggesting efforts to reach

POSTAL INSPECTOR'S DAUGHTER A BRIDE

Miss Hazel Forsyth Jennings, daughter of Postoffice Inspector and Mrs. C. E. Jennings of Newton Highlands, and Hewstone Knight Raymenton, son of Dr. W. H. Raymenton and grandson of the late Joseph E. Knight of Worcester, were married by Rev. C. F. Hill Crathern of Worcester at the home of the bride's parents. Mrs. Raymenton is a graduate of the Emerson College of Oratory, and has been teaching oratory in Athens College, Athens, Ala. Mr. Raymenton is a Yale man. Mr. and Mrs. Raymenton left for a trip through France, Italy and England. They will live in Worcester.

Pugilist Fears for His Life—"White Slave" Case May Drive Him from the City.

CHICAGO, Oct. 21.—Race riots are feared by the police as a result of the feeling against Jack Johnson, negro champion pugilist, following the charges that he abducted Lucille Cameron, the beautiful eighteen-year-old white girl from Minneapolis.

Johnson kept in hiding in the rooms above his cafe today, while five plain clothes men mingled with the huge crowd that has been attracted by the negro's saloon by the additional notoriety given him by the charges of Miss Cameron's mother. Mayor Harrison held a conference with his legal advisers over the question of revoking Johnson's liquor license and driving him from the city.

Threats of death are said to have been sent to Johnson by telephone, letters and by messenger, and it is said that the big negro, who thought the affair a laughing matter at first, is now in fear of his life and may slip away to Europe and remain there for several years.

Johnson was hanged in effigy before a crowd of 1,000 persons within four blocks of the most exclusive residence district of Chicago early today.

The "hanging" took place at Clark street and Montrose boulevard. There were many women in the crowd. A riot call was sent to the town hall police station. The police cut down the figure and dispersed the crowd.

The federal authorities are proceeding with their investigation of the affairs of the black pugilistic champion with a view to seeking an indictment against him in United States Court for violation of the Mann White Slave act.

Friends of the prize fighter urged him

POLICE BLOCK GIRL PICKETS

Two policemen from the Lagrange street station to-day prevented half a dozen girl pickets from stopping three girl strikebreakers entering No. 41 Essex street, where there is a strike in the shirt factory of Ullian, Levin & Katon. The strike has been on nine days. Thirty-seven employes are out, about twenty of whom are girls.

An alleged discrimination against union members caused the strike. Heretofore, the pickets have been successful in preventing any one from taking the places of strikers. Three girls, escorted by policemen, approached the place today. Pickets tried to dissuade them from going to work. The police interfered.

One of the policemen escorted the girls upstairs and the other stood at the bottom of the stairs and prevented the pickets from following the new employes. The pickets were told, they said, that they would be arrested if they interfered with the girls who had taken their places.

HARVARD GREETING TO PROF. EUCKEN

The annual reception of the Harvard German Association to Professor Rudolph Eucken, the exchange professor from Berlin, is to be held this evening at the rooms of the Deutsche Verein in Gray's Hall. Dr. Carl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is to be one of the guests of honor. Professor Kuno Francke, a graduate of the University of Jena, and Professor A. G. Spalding and Professor Munsterberg are to speak.

BABY'S RESCUE THRILLS CROWD

The rescue of a year-old baby girl from a room in the basement of No. 24 Andover street during a fire this afternoon thrilled a crowd of several hundred excited West End residents and made James Brown, eighteen, of No. 27 Phillips street, a hero.

The baby was tiny Ida Fisher, daughter of Mrs. Rose Fisher. The Fishers have a plumbing shop in the front of the basement and live in rooms at the rear. The mother had left the baby sleeping in its crib this afternoon and gone into the store to take charge, as her husband was away.

Suddenly Mrs. Fisher smelled smoke. Looking to the rear she discovered flames leaping up toward the door which separated the store from the living room. She rushed into the street, crying "fire."

Several youths from the neighborhood ran into the store, which by this time had filled with smoke. They tried the door and found it locked. The flames had licked their way up the partition.

Then James Brown came running up. He took in the situation in a moment, rushed into the store, through the smoke, broke in the door and searched in the thick smoke until he located the baby's crib. The child was unconscious. With difficulty Brown returned to the street, himself partially overcome.

It took fifteen minutes to revive baby Ida. The mother had fainted in the street, and after she was brought to she joined the crowd of spectators in praising Brown for his bravery.

Fifteen Mayors Are Guests of President at Motion Pictures

BEVERLY, Oct. 21.—President Taft today entertained fifteen Massachusetts mayors at luncheon at his summer home. The list was headed by Mayor Fitzgerald of Boston who made an address in behalf of the visiting body.

Besides Mayor Fitzgerald the company consisted of Mayors Adams, of Salem; Hatfield, of Newton; Barry, of Cambridge; Malone, of Chelsea; Farrell, of Malden; Connery, of Lynn; Patch, of Gloucester; Burke, of Newburyport; Dodge, of Beverly; O'Connell, of Worcester; Gleason, of Marlboro; Howard, of Brockton; Moulton, of Haverhill; and Scanlon, of Lawrence.

The President and some of his friends this afternoon visited a local theatre where they were entertained with an exhibition of motion pictures in which the President and members of his family are shown. One of the pictures shows Miss Helen Taft on horseback in the Yellowstone Park.

President Taft will meet Secretary of State Knox in Boston Friday and accompany him to Cambridge Springs, Pa., where they will take part in the dedication of a Polish college.

BULL MOOSERS PAID $90,000 IN NEW YORK

NEW YORK, Oct. 21.—The cost of organizing the Progressive party in New York State and running a campaign for three months has been less than $90,000, including $25,000 spent in getting signatures and preparing the petitions which will put the candidates on the official ballot according to figures supplied by the State chairman. The party will have a complete local ticket in fifty-four of the sixty-one counties.

FANNY CROSBY IS REPORTED IMPROVING

BRIDGEPORT, Ct., Oct. 21.—Decided improvement has been noted in the condition of Miss Fanny Crosby, the blind hymnist, who has been seriously ill with pneumonia for some days, at the home of her niece, Mrs. Lillian G. Booth. "If there is no relapse, there is every reason to believe that Miss Crosby will soon be around again," said Mrs. Booth today.

STEAMSHIP CLERK, FEARING DISCHARGE, SHOOTS SELF DEAD

Despondent through fear of losing his position, Miles W. Stewart, fifty-five, ended his life today by firing two shots into his heart from a small-caliber revolver in the yard of his home at No. 143 Bloomingdale street, Chelsea.

Stewart was employed as a clerk for the Merchants & Miners Transportation Company at Battery wharf.

Stewart arose early to start a fire. His sister, Mrs. Emma L. Norton, with whom he was living, came into the kitchen shortly after and was startled to hear a shot, quickly followed by a second. Running out, she found Stewart dying. A doctor was summoned, but he was dead before he arrived.

Stewart was keeper of records and seals for the Chelsea Lodge of Odd Fellows, and also a member of the Robert Lash Lodge of Masons.

MAYOR TO ASK RED SOX OWNERS TO HELP PAY FOR NEW ROAD

The Red Sox management will be asked by Mayor Fitzgerald to make a contribution toward the cost of the construction of a highway crossing the Fens from the junction of Hemenway street and Huntington avenue in Jersey street on the northerly side.

The baseball park of the Boston Americans will benefit by the proposed new street, which will enable the public to get to and from Fenway Park in much quicker time by relieving street car congestion.

PERKINS TELLS OF DONATIONS

at the end of the campaign there were no outstanding obligations."

Senator Clapp asked Mr. Ryan:

"How much of your contribution came from you personally?"

"Every dollar I gave was my own. I didn't get a cent from a corporation or anyone else."

Ryan added that he might have contributed to congressional campaigns, but he didn't remember any specific gifts.

"Do you know of any contributions in 1904 or 1908 other than your own?"

"I do not."

In answer to a general question by Senator Clapp concerning Democratic conditions during the present year, the New York financier said:

"When I came back from Europe in 1911, I was sure that the Democratic chances of success in 1912 were brighter than in any previous campaign. I was positive that any good Democrat, except Mr. Bryan, could be elected.

Aided Harmon Campaign.

"Mr. Bryan, having been defeated three times, I regarded as the only cloud in the Democratic sky. I was a lifelong friend of Governor Harmon, and, as has been previously testified, I gave between $70,000 and $80,000 to his campaign fund. As he was a Southerner I naturally wished to see him nominated and I contributed in the neighborhood of $30,000 to that end. I never had any reward for these or any other political gifts, nor did I ever hope for any."

Senator Pomerene caused some merriment when he asked the witness what part of his 1904 contribution had been made after he was sure Parker could not be elected. Ryan replied:

"I concluded that Judge Parker could not be elected before he was nominated. Therefore all I gave was subsequent to that conclusion. It was given for the good of the Democratic party."

Perkins a "Retired Worker."

"Put me down as a retired working man," said George W. Perkins to the official stenographer on taking the stand. "At present I am spending about eighteen hours a day to put through an eight-hour law."

"What do you know of the 1904 campaign?" asked Chairman Clapp.

"I feel so indifferent when contributions are concerned, after listening to Mr. Ryan's testimony, that I don't know whether I am going to be interesting," replied Mr. Perkins.

He told the committee that in 1904 he was a member of the firm of J. P. Morgan & Co., and also was connected with the New York Life Insurance Company, and that he served under Treasurer Bliss of the Republican National Committee.

"There has been evidence with reference to meeting in New York in 1904 of certain big business men to determine what candidate they would support," said Senator Clapp. "What do you know about that?"

"I have no recollection of any such meeting, and the first I heard of it was when Judge Parker made the charge."

The witness said that he contributed somewhere between $50,000 and $50,000 in 1904 and that he believed J. P. Morgan contributed $150,000.

When asked about a contribution made in 1904 by the New York Life, Mr. Perkins said:

"Now, Senator, there has been so much discussion about that contribution and I have been criticised so much about it in the shape of indecorous lies, that I would like to file a statement."

Explains N. Y. Life Contribution.

Perkins' statement, which purported to contain facts in connection with the New York Life Insurance Company's contribution to the Republican National committee in 1904, was in the form of questions and answers before the Armstrong Insurance Investigation Committee of 1906, at which time John McCall, president of the New York Life, testified. The remainder of this portion of the Perkins statement was taken up with his own personal views relative to the publicity campaign contributions, concluding with the statement that he had sent Cornelius N. Bliss $74,019.15 rather than allow the contribution to be credited directly to the New York Life, of which he was at that time a trustee.

Perkins testified that he recalled nothing specifically of the so-called Harriman fund, but "If such a fund was raised, I may have made a contribution to it or I may not have."

He said that he made contributions to the State campaigns in Maryland and West Virginia, but did not recall the amounts. He offered to the committee several letters and said that while all of them did not bear on campaign contributions, "rather gathered that my motives and activities are quite as much in question as any contributions I have made."

One of the letters was dated October 15, 1908, enclosing a check for $10,000, "for the benefit of Senator Beveridge, to be sent to that candidate in Indiana independent of the Western committee."

Beveridge Returned $10,000.

A second letter dated November 17, 1908, from Cornelius N. Bliss to Mr. Perkins, acknowledged the receipt of a check for $10,000 which Perkins had returned to Bliss. In explaining the return of the check, Perkins said:

"The $10,000 I returned was the money given to me to send to Senator Beveridge. I sent it, but he returned it, saying that he found himself able to pay his own expenses and did not want to put that expense on the national committee."

The witness said that he had given some $20,000 to the Republican Congressional Committee in 1908 and other small amounts for local expenses in New York.

"All this work of mine," he said, "has been growing ever since my boyhood and I have never had any thought of reward. These funds look large in the newspapers, but everything is relative. I remember one campaign which I waged to save the Palisades of the Hudson, in which I raised a million and a half dollars."

ANDREW CARNEGIE, LAIRD OF SKIBO, AS HE LOOKS TODAY

NEW YORK, Oct. 21.—"I always laugh in the presence of kings," naively responded Andrew Carnegie, Laird of Skibo, replying to the question of ship news reporters. If ever he intended to expatriate himself and become a subject of King George, whom he has entertained on several occasions.

"The first and last thing is to laugh," the chirper laird said. "I always do when I'm in the presence of a King. As a rule the King doesn't mind. He knows he is something of a fakir, and so he laughs with me. The late King Edward told me once it was a pity America had not got a King instead of a President.

GOVERNOR FOSS SEES LANDSLIDE

WHERE DEMOCRATS ARE TO MEET FOR TONIGHT'S RALLIES

Here are tonight's Democratic rallies and speakers:

Quincy—Governor Foss, David B. Shaw, Congressman Curley, George H. Corliss, Former Mayor Shea and others.

Braintree—Congressman Curley, Governor Foss, David I. Walsh, Thomas H. Dowd and others.

Randolph—David I. Walsh, Thomas H. Dowd, David B. Shaw, Governor Foss and others.

Framingham—John R. Murphy, Joseph A. Sheehan, John F. Meaney, John J. Boyan and others.

Lynn—William L. Sullivan, Thomas A. Mullen and others.

Andover—John J. Douglas, Humphrey O'Sullivan and others.

Duxbury—Sherman L. Whipple, Harvey H. Pratt, Thomas C. Thacher, William S. McNary and others.

Plymouth—Sherman L. Whipple, Harvey H. Pratt, Thomas C. Thacher, William S. McNary and others.

Governor Foss, at the beginning of his whirlwind tour of the State today, declared that he is confident he will be elected at the coming election and that the Democratic ticket will sweep the State.

Governor Foss began his tour with speeches at Avon, Holbrook and Brockton, and at each place was greeted by large crowds. He was accompanied by David I. Walsh, candidate for Lieutenant-Governor; Governor Mann of Virginia and Edward Gilmore of Brockton, candidate for Congress in the Fourteenth District.

While being whirled in an automobile from Avon to Holbrook, Governor Foss told the AMERICAN reporter that he was confident the Democrats would make a clean sweep of the State. He said:

G. O. P. Routed.

"It is apparent that the Republican party has abandoned the State fight. They are concentrating all their efforts to the Legislature and attempting to make Mayor Fitzgerald the issue relative to the senatorial fight. I think they realize they are beaten.

"I feel that we are going to have a sweeping victory. I feel that we are going to win ten Congressmen out of sixteen.

"From my observation throughout the State the Bull Moose party will cast a good vote. There is considerable enthusiasm in the rural districts for Roosevelt. But Roosevelt is only drawing from the G. O. P. I don't think he will materially draw much support from the Democrats."

The party left Brockton very early today. With the Governor were Chairman Riley of the Democratic State Committee, David I. Walsh, ex-Senator Thomas H. Dowd, ex-Senator David B. Shaw, Congressman Curley and Edward Gilmore, candidate for Congress in the Fourteenth District.

Avon was first on the list. Then came Holbrook, Douglas, Whitman, Abington, Easton, Stoughton, Canton, Norwood and Dedham. Noon rallies were on the card at Brockton, Whitman, Rockland and Abington.

Children Sing "America."

The Governor's auto, containing the Governor himself, Governor Mann of Virginia, and two newspaper men, drew up in Avon square at 10:30. Here David I. Walsh and his party joined the Governor.

Governor Foss was welcomed by 200 school children from the Gurnsey and Littlefield grammar schools. The children waved small American flags and sang "America."

Governor Mann said: "I am very glad to see the children. I am the governor of the great commonwealth of Virginia, and the interests of Virginia are similar and very much in common with the old Massachusetts. I am glad to see the children carrying flags, and thus showing their patriotism."

Governor Foss addressed his opening remarks to the children. Continuing he said:

"We are going to elect a new President this year. Wilson and Marshall will be elected. The old election bowl that the Republicans always put up is now a dead issue. Notwithstanding the fact that we had a Democratic Congress this year, the business interests of the country were never in such a prosperous condition. The stock markets and the business interests in general anticipate the changes that are coming through Wilson and Marshall.

"The tariff is to be revised for the common good of all."

Scores New Haven.

The Governor then touched on State issues, saying the New Haven as the "corporation that controls all the railroad lines in this State, and if the State of Massachusetts gave that corporation the privilege, it would also control every trolley line."

"The one big issue in the campaign," he said, "is the establishing of a public utilities board. This board will control railway matters and must have mandatory powers. The first steps toward its establishment must be taken now."

The Governor said also that reformations could be made in the conducting of our penal institutions.

David I. Walsh spoke, as did Edward Gilmore of Brockton, Democratic candidate for Congress in the Fourteenth District.

DEFENSE CALLS BECKER RAIDERS

the Becker jury, and he immediately put private detectives to watching this man.

This week is likely to wind up the trial and a verdict is expected early next week. Becker and his wife are expected to testify Wednesday. Among the rumors in circulation today was one that William Shapiro and the four indicted gunmen will testify for Becker. Shapiro drove the "murder car" and is under indictment.

It has been reported that Shapiro, despite his affidavit in the hands of the District Attorney that he could not identify any of the men in his car, is ready to swear that Rosenthal and Vallon were among them. The gunmen, according to the same rumors, are eager to testify that they were not in the car and an alibi will be their defence in their own trial.

It will materially help their case if they can prove that the State witnesses were in the car.

Shepard Again Witness.

Becker looked fresher and in better spirits than when court adjourned Saturday.

He leaned forward expectantly when Joseph B. Shepard, a former member of his "strong arm" squad, was recalled for cross-examination.

Shepard was questioned to throw further light on Becker's raid of Herman Rosenthal's gambling house last Spring. The contention of the defence is that the raid was legitimate; Becker was charged by the prosecution with conducting a "frame up" raid.

James W. White, another former member of Becker's "strong arm" squad, and a medal man on the Police Department, followed Shepard. White is one of the policemen under indictment for perjury in the alleged "frame up" of "Big Jack" Zelig, the gang leader who was recently assassinated.

White testified to the Rosenthal raid which was made April 15 last. He said he took part in it and corroborated Shepard's testimony.

Denies Convict's Testimony.

White flatly denied the story of James Hallen, the convict, who testified that he overheard Becker and White talking together in the Tombs and that Becker had said, "Sit tight, Jimmy, they have only the word of a crook, and when the excitement has died out they will get no pension for killing that ——— crook Rosenthal." White swore Becker made no such statement to him.

C. C. Steinert, another former member of Becker's "Strong Arm" squad, who is under indictment with White, contradicted Sam Schepps' testimony regarding a conversation, but he was largely discredited when cross-examined.

O'Connor, Fined $5 for Batting Ball on Common, Appeals

Eugene J. O'Connor, champion of Sunday baseball, was fined $5 in the Municipal Court today for throwing and batting a baseball on the Common yesterday. O'Connor made a plea in his own behalf and in behalf of Sunday baseball.

The technical charge made against O'Connor was "gaming on the Lord's Day." When the warrant was first read before Judge Burke, O'Connor refused to plead.

"Your Honor, my name is not the name on the warrant," he said. "My name is Eugene J. O'Connor, Jr., not Junior."

The warrant had omitted the "Junior." O'Connor still refused to plead, and the court ordered a plea of not guilty entered. The case was later tried before Judge Eby.

O'Connor told the court that Boston Common had been left to the city for recreation. "I have been arrested twice before on the charge of playing baseball on Sunday," said O'Connor. "For two years I have been trying to get a jury trial to decide the issue.

GRAND TRUNK IS AFTER NEW ROAD

Active negotiations are under way, according to a dispatch from Chicago today, for the acquisition of the Chicago Great Western Railroad by the Grand Trunk system.

Chicago officials decline to say how far negotiations have gone or whether the Grand Trunk intends to absorb or gain control of the stock of the Great Western.

In New York nothing could be learned in relation to the report.

The Chicago news is of the greatest interest to Boston, which is to be the Eastern terminal of the Grand Trunk. This system is to be extended to Boston just as soon as the road can be built.

Boston and the whole State advocated the extension of the Grand Trunk to this city as one of the vital movements that would help in the building up of this great port, the business of Boston and of the State.

The Chicago Great Western Railroad is operated under a charter granted on January 8, 1902, under the laws of Illinois. A reorganization took place three years ago with a charter running fifty years.

The last annual report said that the road operated 1402 miles of line, including subsidiary lines.

This road taps the great Middle West connecting Chicago, Omaha, St. Paul, Minneapolis and Kansas City. There are eighteen of the smaller lines.

The acquisition of this railroad, supplanting as it would the Grand Trunk Pacific, which runs through the great Northwest to the Pacific, would make of the Grand Trunk a wonderful transcontinental system, and would inure to the benefit of Boston.

The Chicago Great Western is a Morgan road, and the shares of the company, both preferred and common, are in the keeping of a voting trust composed of Mr. Morgan, George P. Baker and Robert Fleming.

GERMANS TRY TURKEY TROT AT NEWPORT

NEWPORT, R. I., Oct. 21.—The Germans are doing it now. When the crew of the Kaiser's cruiser, Victoria Luise, arrived for a visit at Newport, R. I., officers and men were introduced to the turkey trot.

The band practiced the dance music two weeks, then sprung it at an affair given in honor of the American Army and Navy officers.

YOUR DIAMONDS ARE WORTH MORE TODAY

LONDON, Oct. 21.—"Diamonds are dear and the cost of all precious stones is rising. Last week there was an increase of from 5 to 10 per cent. in the cost of all precious stones. These increases are likely to continue," said a prominent Hatton Garden merchant. "The ever-growing demand for diamonds is exceeding the supply."

Hall Caine's Masterly Novel "The Woman Thou Gavest Me"

This serial is the most talked of story of the season. It has to do with the rebellion of a young girl against the efforts of a reckless father to sacrifice her to social ambitions and blight her life, as he did her mother's.

Its absorbing plot and sustained interest equals and even exceeds "The Christian" or "The Eternal City" by the same author. You cannot afford to miss this great story.

Filene's

The Annual Sale of WOMEN'S DRESSES

at the Once-a-Year Prices of $12.50, $15, $18.50, $25

Intended for the woman who would purchase her Winter Dresses before Winter is here at prices usually pertaining to end-of-season "bargain sales."

This sale means just that.

Filene methods make possible the offering of newly-made and absolutely seasonable Winter dresses at prices one would expect to pay when the birds are nesting.

No need of much talk about such a proposition, is there?

Let's let the dresses do the talking.

Dancing Frock at the Once-a-Year Price of $12.50

Youthful dress of chiffon draped over China silk. The bodice is trimmed with soft creamy lace and the skirt slightly ruffled. In pink, light blue and white.

Broadcloth Street Dress at the Once-a-Year Price of $15

Of soft silky broadcloth. The front fastening is under heavily soutache braided band. Long sleeves finished with net frills. The collar is cut in one of the new shapes, broad over the shoulder and shallow in front. Gay Oriental colored band embroidery adds a note of color. In five different colors.

Afternoon Dress of Charmeuse at the Once-a-Year Price of $15

Fastened in front in vest effect. White satin collar finished with hand embroidery.

Afternoon Gown of Charmeuse at the Once-a-Year Price of $18.50

Two Styles of Evening Dresses at the Once-a-Year Price of $25

Imported beaded robes personally selected abroad and mounted in our own workrooms. The linings are daintily colored satin made and finished as a particular dressmaker might. The robes are heavily bugle-beaded and come in black as well as white.

An exquisite evening gown of crepe de chine. Over the softly draped skirt falls a drapery of white lace, caught up in low pannier fashion toward the back. The bodice is also draped with lace. A crush satin girdle is finished with pearl butterfly ornament and the sleeves are edged with pearls.

'OUT OF PULPIT FOR GOOD,' SAYS DR. HAMILTON

"I am out of the ministry for good. I shall not preach again," declared the Rev. Dr. Frederick W. Hamilton, former president of Tufts, at his home in Somerville today, as he announced his intention to enter business the first of next month. "The pulpit and business do not mix," he said with a smile.

Dr. Hamilton the first of next month will take up his new duties as business manager of the American Forestry Company, with offices at No. 15 Beacon street, Boston. He has been supplying the pulpit at the North Cambridge Universalist Church for some time, but will give that up.

Must Be Separate.

Dr. Hamilton said when asked his reasons for leaving the ministry today:

"The offer that came to me to enter business was such a good one that I thought it foolish to refuse it. I have really been out of the active ministry as a pastor, for six years, or ever since I became president of Tufts. Had I remained in the active pastorate, I probably should have felt differently about it. I shall not preach again, as I believe business and the pulpit should be kept entirely separate.

"A business man should keep out of the pulpit. A pastor should keep out of business. I do not look down on the pulpit as a profession by any means. I am glad that I spent a good part of my life in the pulpit. I would never advise a young man not to enter the ministry if he thought he was called to enter it. But if a man thinks he has finished with the work of a minister, why I think that he should enter business if a good field presents itself.

The dropping out of Dr. Hamilton as president of Tufts leaves but two ministers now presidents of New England colleges, Dr. W. H. P. Faunce of Brown University and Dr. W. W. Hyde of Bowdoin College.

Now Heads Business.

Dr. Hamilton will take active charge of the business of the forestry company, which furnishes landscape gardeners and the material for forestry work. Theodore S. Borst is the head of the concern, and he will give it the technical attention it needs. Dr. Hamilton will superintend the business end. The nurseries of the company, where it raises its stock, are at Little Tree Farms, Framingham.

AUTO AND AEROPLANE PAWNSHOP IS LATEST

PARIS, Oct. 21.—The Mont de Piete, the great pawnshop of Paris, has decided to go into the business of pawning automobiles and aeroplanes. An immense garage, capable of holding 2,000 cars, is to be built. Space will also be provided for the aeroplanes.

Hermann Oelrichs Wins Fortune From Mrs. Vanderbilt

NEW YORK, Oct. 21.—It looks very much as if Mrs. W. K. Vanderbilt, Jr., would be called upon soon to pay a debt of honor to her young nephew, Hermann Oelrichs. The debt is a large one—some say a half million dollars was the amount of the wager. But it was such a wager that Mrs. Vanderbilt, in losing it, will consider that she has won.

A few years ago, as young Oelrichs was nearing the age when boys regard cigarettes as the insignia of manhood, his aunt challenged him to lay part of his future fortune against a similar part of hers on the proposition that he would not smoke or touch intoxicants of any kind until he should reach his majority.

He accepted the challenge and the time of settlement will arrive with his twenty-first birthday next month.

Mrs. Vanderbilt may well be proud of her losses. Her nephew, who is a chum of Vincent Astor and a student in the law school of Columbia, has been for years the model youth of Newport and New York society. And he has been an example to the other fellows in proving that a boy can shun bad habits without being a mollycoddle.

"BORROWED" AUTO FOR JOY RIDE; HELD ON THREE CHARGES

As a result of a short joy ride in a "borrowed" automobile, William N. McAuliffe, who gave his address as Cambridge, was today sent to the Dedham jail from the Brookline police court by Judge Perkins. When brought before the judge the prisoner faced three charges—intoxication, operating an automobile while intoxicated and operating an automobile without a license. His case was continued until Thursday, and in default of $200 bail he was locked up.

The automobile belongs to Charles F. Curtis, former police commissioner of Boston. The machine disappeared on Saturday evening from St. Mary and Ivy streets, Back Bay. It was located by Policeman Minehan in Brookline when McAuliffe stopped to ask a friend to take a ride with him. The friend disappeared.

MRS. PLANT ASKS POSTPONEMENT ON DIVORCE HEARING

Mrs. Caroline Plant, wife of the millionaire shoe manufacturer, Thomas G. Plant, today asked Judge Hardy, through her counsel, that her action for divorce be put over until Thursday. As a reason for the delay the lawyers stated that witnesses who were very necessary to the case would be unable to come to court until that day.

Many of Mrs. Plant's friends were about the corridors of the courthouse today, expecting that the case would come on.

Rappold's Beauty Secret

MME. RAPPOLD, FAMOUS SINGER.

Calls Latest Gown the All-Up-in-a-Knot One, in Which Wearer Has to Stand.

(Photo by Mishkin.)

By ELIZABETH ELLIOTT.

Gowns to the right of her, gowns to the left of her—gowns, gowns, gowns—and each one of them the latest cry from Paris.

"The present day gowning lumodest and inartistic! Not for a moment. We have reached the very pinnacle of art in gowning. Just look at the graceful lines in the gowns of today—and the drapery! Hasn't drapery always been considered artistic?" argued Mme. Rappold.

"Today all the gowns are practically draped about the figure. There is the narrow skirt—the under gown as it were—for foundation upon which all the other is draped in most artistic fashion," continued this famous artist, who sang in Boston with the Symphony Orchestra Saturday night and created quite as much of a sensation by her wonderful gowning as with her marvelous voice. And stubborn as I was, in my opinion in the beginning, I had to admit that the gowns she showed me were art, pure and simple—ART spelled all with capitals.

"I admit they're hard to walk in, but that's the one and only fault there is to be found with the gowns of today," added Mme. Rappold.

"All-Up-in-a-Knot Gown."

"How would you best describe the latest of fashion's dictates," I asked as I struggled hopelessly with the few adjectives at my command, and puzzled my brain over the knots and twists of these creations.

"I'd call them the all-up-in-a-knot gown," and with that she brought out of the closet one of these confections, and at first sight I thought her description, or name the most appropriate one possible. It was a slimsy black satin affair with folds caught here and there, a slender pointed train, and not half a yard wide at the bottom. When it was properly shaken out it really did somewhat resemble a gown, though you might not have recognized the resemblance if you hadn't seen several others shaken out and held up for inspection in much the same manner.

I remarked the narrowness of the skirt. "Yes, I think one is supposed to stand still in this gown," The handsome prima donna laughed with keen amusement, "and then on only one foot" some one added.

And while a glorious creation that almost made one's mouth water was being displayed I asked Mme. Rappold, who is the highest type of vibrant, wholesome, beautiful woman, to tell me of her "secrets" of beauty. I was almost willing to promise never to tell, so wonderful I concluded they must be, but she simply laughed her musical mellow laugh, which seemed to ripple and gurgle up somewhere from out the depths of the folds and frills of her flower-like chiffon bodice, and quite appropriately she informed me that "good nature" was the cause of it all.

"Just keep sweet and good natured, laugh when you feel most like swearing, and bring onto your temper as you would to your last dollar. For it's your best stock in trade. Health? Why good, nature brings health. I don't bathe in milk or use any wonderful creams or lotions, but I do get plenty of nourishing food and an unlimited supply of fresh air. Walking is my favorite exercise, and I walk a great deal. Don't you know that walking is the surest cure in the world for a grouch? Why, I have walked and walked when I knew I must have been leaving a perfect trail of gloom behind me, for the longer I walked the less I had of the gloom."

The Study Problem.

"Which do you think the better for the young singer, to study in America or in Europe?" I asked her next.

"It is so expensive in America, so terribly expensive to study that I believe it better to study abroad. In Europe they are constantly in an atmosphere of music. They can hear the best operas so reasonably.

"We have wonderful teachers in New York. It really is a shame when one thinks of the number of American girls who are being encouraged to study abroad whose voices are absolutely hopeless. The teachers there are not as conscientious as the teachers here. In America I think the average teacher will discourage a student whom they find hopeless, but in Europe they get all their money and are content to turn out failures. There's many a tragedy of which the world at large knows nothing, just on this account.

DR. H. W. BROUGHTON INJURED IN COLLISION

An outward-bound electric car struck an automobile today at Centre street and Lawerville place, Jamaica Plain, injuring the driver, Dr. Henry W. Broughton of No. 7 Lakeville place, Jamaica Plain. He was rendered unconscious by the collision and taken to his home near by, where it was found that one rib was broken and that he had several bad wounds on his face. M. Broughton, his brother, attended him.

Five cents a pair is all you need to pay to have socks or stockings darned now—all ye bachelors or busy housewives.

If your "holy" toe-gear piles up unreasonably, why, the Cambridge Young Women's Christian Association girls have formed a club which will solve your problem.

The Campfire Girls it is who are going to do the darning. It is only one of many domestic activities that the club will take up, it being allied to the Boy Scout organization.

"BIG TIM" SULLIVAN TAKEN TO COUNTRY

NEW YORK, Oct. 21.—Persistent reports during the last ten months that Timothy D. Sullivan ("Big Tim") had suffered a physical breakdown came to a climax today when it was reported that he had been taken to the country for his health. The change was made about ten days ago. The general impression along Broadway is that "Tim is in pretty bad shape."

LYNN SHOOTER HELD BY COURT

Marchop Casparian, who shot his wife probably fatally and seriously injured his sister-in-law Saturday, appeared in the Lynn police court today charged with assault with intent to kill. He pleaded not guilty and was held without bail for a hearing next Friday.

Dr. Stone of the Lynn Hospital told the judge that Mrs. Casparian was in a critical condition and would probably die. One of the bullets went through the left shoulder, penetrated the lung and lodged between the eighth and ninth ribs. The sister, Mrs. Annie Peterson, will probably recover.

Casparian, an Armenian, had been separated from his wife for a month. Saturday morning he went to his wife's home, where she was nursing her sister. There Casparian fired two shots at his wife, Mrs. Peterson sprang for the revolver, but Casparian sent a bullet through her right side and fled across the Lynn marshes, but was captured by the police.

Mayor's Candidacy for Crane's Toga Has Cost $48, He Says

The candidacy of Mayor Fitzgerald for the United States Senate has cost him to date $48, according to a statement issued from his office this afternoon.

The statement was issued in answer to published statements to the effect that he was spending thousands of dollars in his efforts to secure the seat of Senator Winthrop Murray Crane. The Mayor says:

"Up to date I am indebted to Young's Hotel $28 for headquarters. I have spent $12 for typewriting bills, about $8 for telephone calls, and a few dollars for incidentals. I am not in touch in any way with the Bull Moose cause, and have not talked, directly nor indirectly, with any of its leaders."

LAWRENCE CHIEF TELLS OF BIG SRTIKE RIOT

Marshal Sullivan Says He Saw Ettor Leading Riotous Paraders.

SALEM COURTHOUSE, Oct. 21.—Inspector Michael J. Byron of the Lawrence Police Court was the star witness today in the trial of Ettor, Giovannitti and Caruso, jointly charged with the murder of Annie Lo Pezi during the Lawrence strike riots.

Inspector Byron was asked by District Attorney Attwill to describe the arrest of the defendant Giovannitti.

"We got him in a house in Lawrence street," testified Byron. "I went there with a squad of officers, among whom were States Detective Eustis and others. On the way from the house to the police station Detective Flynn and I walked beside Giovannitti and the others followed."

"What did he say on the way to the station house, if anything?" asked the District Attorney.

This question brought a chorus of protests from the defence. There was a conference at the bench. Judge Quinn decided to let the witness answer the question.

Quotes Prisoner.

"We were walking down the street past the Common, when I remarked to Giovannitti:

"There's the old bandstand from which you told the strikers to go home and sleep by day and to act like wild animals at night.'

"He replied to me: 'Yes, and there will be more speaking from there yet.'

"That is all he'd said on the way to the police station."

The three prisoners followed every attitude of Inspectors Byron's testimony with keen interest. It was the first time any direct testimony involving the name of Giovannitti had been offered, and while Byron was testifying Giovannitti sat rigid in the middle of the three defendants, his head thrown back against the metal wall of the prisoners' cage. He was very pale.

Byron also described the scenes on January 15 and 29.

"I saw twenty-eight men under arrest in the office of the Pacific Mill charged with trespass," added Byron. I saw shots fired in Canal street at a man who was directing a hose at the crowd. There were from one thousand to two thousand people in the crowd and they were booing and hooting. The militia dispersed the crowd.

Walter Eichler, a young mechanical engineer, employed in the Pacific mills, described a spirited tug-of-war which he and several other employes had with infuriated strikers for the possession of a hose.

"We had been playing the hose to drive them back after they had broken through the mill gate," testified Eichler. "Finally, about fifteen of the strikers got possession of the hose and drenched us. I was soaked to the skin. We fought and got the hose back and turned the nozzle on them again.

"I heard three shots in the yard. I did not see any blood. There was a large crowd there."

Eichler was cross-examined by Attorney John P. F. Mahoney, counsel for Ettor. His testimony dealt mainly with the riot of January 15, the first violent outbreak of the Lawrence strike.

Under cross-examination, Engineer Eichler repeated his testimony about the storming of the mill's gate and the use of the fire hose as a means of defence.

"How many got into the yard?" asked Attorney Mahoney.

"Half a dozen."

"Didn't you say under direct examination that the whole crowd got in?"

"I meant that only six got into the yard before the hose was played. Many more got in afterwards."

Driven Back by Hose.

"What prevented them from getting in?"

"The hose being played on them."

"How many lines of hose were there?"

"I don't remember."

"Did any extend beyond the gate?"

"No."

"What length were they?"

Judge Quinn interrupted to say:

"What do these details amount to? It makes no difference about the length of hose, it seems to me. I merely make this suggestion to expedite the trial."

"Can you give us an idea of how many streams were played on the crowd?"

"Six or eight."

"Was the water hot or cold?"

"Cold."

"Was it a warm or cold day?"

"Cold. Below thirty degrees."

"Are you sure the streams were not played on the crowd before they entered the gate?"

"I am."

City Marshal John J. Sullivan of Lawrence testified that he is at present acting chief of police, and has been connected with the department thirty-one years. Counsel for Caruso and Giovannitti objected to all testimony submitted by Marshal Sullivan relative to the disturbances on January 15, or on any other date prior to the arrival of their clients in Lawrence.

"I was stationed at the Wood Mills the morning of the 15th of January," he testified. "People with dinner pails and baskets were jostled and roughly handled. Pails and baskets were torn from their hands and trampled upon and scattered about.

"Booed" at Police.

"I had fifteen officers, but the crowd rushed the mills and many got in. They shouted. When the trolley cars came at six o'clock passengers were yanked off and their pails taken from them. We did our best to keep a clearing and preserve order. We succeeded in getting into the mills some who wanted to go to work. The crowd kept shouting, 'Don't work! Don't work today!'

"On the morning of January 29 I saw a crowd of three or four hundred going past the station house just before 5 o'clock. I saw Ettor in that crowd. They were booing at the police station, shouting, hooting and whistling. They went down Common street past the police station toward City Hall. At 6 o'clock I found a crowd of people at the junction of Appleton and Common streets. I did not see any of the defendants in the crowd then.

"The crowd held up operatives and took their dinner pails, baskets and overalls, jostled them and cried, 'No work today!'

"I heard the breaking of glass on Essex street and going there arrested a man for breaking a car window. Essex street was full of people. When I hastened to Essex street, the crowd followed from Common street. When I arrested the man, the crowd shrieked, 'Let him go!' They threw lumps of ice and frozen snow at me. I drew my revolver and threatened to shoot them.

Held On to Prisoner.

"Did you hold your man and bring him to the police station?"

"I did."

"Did you see Ettor that morning?"

"I did. In a crowd of five hundred or more. I saw him in the front of a great parade of strikers some hours later."

Cross-examined, Marshal Sullivan said he could not swear it was Caruso he saw marching near Ettor that morning.

"Did you issue permits to so-called detectives to carry revolvers?"

District Attorney Attwill objected. The question was excluded, and Attorney Mahoney saved exception.

Taken in hand by Attorney Peters, City Marshal Sullivan said he saw no demonstration of violence on the part of the paraders while Ettor was with them.

Attorney Peters started to question Marshal Sullivan about the stubs or permits issued to carry weapons, but the witness did not think they had been saved.

"Weren't the crowds sprinkled with armed specials in civilian clothes?"

Plain-Clothes Men.

"Only the plain-clothes squad of our regular men."

"How many of those?"

"Not more than six. The others were plain-clothes men like the State detectives.

District Attorney Attwill endeavored by redirect examination to show that all the reserve police squad had badges and all but the regular plain-clothes men had uniforms. There were seventy-five regular men and thirty-two reserve. There was a detail of fifty metropolitan police.

Attorney Peters in re-cross-examination of City Marshal Sullivan asked:

"Weren't there 250 citizens of Lawrence most of whom were armed?"

"Yes."

Moulton Batchelder, former State policeman and corporation officer of the mills, retired, testified that he saw a mob making a disturbance and speechmaking near the Washington mills on January 15.

"A leader with a stick was there and he urged others to follow him," said the witness. "They rushed on the police, but they were driven back. I heard several shots and saw smoke. The crowd sidetracked street cars. Windows were smashed. I telephoned the police and the crowd moved on to the Atlantic mills.

"A militia company drove them back at the point of the bayonet.

One Man Stabbed.

"The military company drove them back at the point of the bayonet. One fellow was stabbed. The crowd numbered two hundred or more, I should say. Then they stoned the upper Pacific mill. They smashed the windows in the new Pacific mill and then scattered."

Recalls How Workers Were Attacked and Dinner Pails Seized.

"Did you see Ettor on the morning of January 15?"

"I did. He was the man I saw without a hat and with a long stick, trying to urge the others to follow him across the bridge at the lower Pacific mills.

"I didn't know his name at that time."

HOW ENGINEER AT LAWRENCE DEFENDED MILL WITH A HOSE

We had been playing the hose to drive them back after they had broken through the mill gate. Finally about fifteen of the strikers got possession of the hose and drenched us. I was soaked to the skin. We fought and got the hose back and turned the nozzle on them again.

I heard three shots in the yard. I did not see any blood. There was a large crowd there.

—From testimony of Walter Eichler, mechanical engineer at the Pacific mills.

HUNT IN SAUGUS FOR LITTLEFIELD

DESCRIPTION OF THE MAN MISSING FROM MELROSE

Five feet eight inches tall.

Weight about 160 pounds.

Heavy red mustache, deep-set brown eyes, hair inclined to be grayish.

Wore a light brown felt hat, blue coat and waistcoat, gray trousers, soft cheviot shirt, turned-down collar, black four-in-hand tie and black boots.

The search for Hosea B. Littlefield, fifty-nine, of No. 75 Baxter street, Melrose, who has been missing since last Friday, was resumed by a hundred volunteer Melrose citizens, the police and the fire department, at dawn today.

The searchers scoured woods and roads toward Saugus and Lynn where last reports placed the man who is supposed to be wandering demented, as the result of a recent illness.

The search was conducted by automobiles. Mayor French personally directed the work.

The volunteers were divided into squads with a member of the Police Department in charge.

Mrs. Mary Green of No. 160 Howard street and Robert J. Kiley of Upham street have reported seeing the man since his disappearance. At the Measham drug store in Cliftondale he asked for a glass of water, leaving immediately afterward and going in the direction of Lynn.

The police are of the opinion that after reaching Lynn he boarded a train for Boston and started for Portland, Me. They have asked the police of that city to assist in locating him. One report was that he had his breakfast at the home of Chester Haven, No. 40 Emerson street, on Saturday morning.

Horn Rimmed "Specs" "de trop" at Harvard Now; Mayor Blamed

Mayor Fitzgerald is in Harvard's bad graces. He has relegated one of Harvard's most popular fads, say the students, in short, Harvard is giving up tortoise, horn or celluloid rimmed glasses, because Mayor Fitzgerald has worn them.

Harvard was the scene of the fresh glasses' first appearance in New England, but the staple article, the silver and gold-rimmed spectacles and the pince-nez, are coming back to their own.

The tortoise-shell rim made a three-base hit at Harvard last year, and he who wore glasses, and who failed to have the grotesque rims around his inner and fourth "eye" respectively was distinctly out of the running as an up-to-date student.

Everybody in the university wore them who wore glasses at all. But now they are distinctly "de trop."

CITY FUNDS LOW AT GLOUCESTER

GLOUCESTER, Oct. 21.—The first public report of the recent hearing at the State House before the Legislative Committee on Municipal Finances was given out today. The report showed that city officials of Gloucester, including Mayor Patch, had admitted the city's finances were sadly depleted, and that unpaid tax loans alone amounted to $233,000.

According to the report, Mayor Patch testified before the committee that the city had a deficit of $20,000 in 1910. The Mayor said that an increase in the tax rate from $12 to $14 would help the city. It was admitted before the committee that the $30,000 fund of the Huntress Home for Aged Women had been borrowed by the city and used up. City officials declared it was the city's intention to restore the fund.

Limestone or Granite Annex? Mayor Wants Opinion of Chamber

Mayor Fitzgerald has appealed to the members of the Boston Chamber of Commerce for expressions of opinion on the question of whether limestone or granite shall be used in building the new City Hall Annex. The City Council is now debating the question. The Mayor writes:

"The contract for the annex calls for limestone, but the architect has urged the advantages of granite. The Finance Commission favors limestone, the original material.

"On such a question, the opinion of the chamber would be of particular value because of the experience of many of the members in the construction and occupancy of buildings similar to that contemplated.

"As a matter of local pride, it would seem that Massachusetts granite ought to be employed. The granite quarries of the State are far-famed. Other cities find it good, and employ it in the construction of their public buildings.

GUARD JOHNSON FROM ASSASSINS

today to forefeit his $1,500 bond to the government and leave the country.

Washington Scores Pugilist.

Word came from Detroit today that Booker T. Washington, the famous negro educator, had publicly urged all negroes to repudiate the pugilist. Dr. Washington was addressing the Detroit Y. M. C. A. when he made reference to Johnson. He said:

"It is unfortunate that a man with money should use it in a way to injure his own people with those who are seeking to uplift his race and improve its condition. Chicago is now witnessing a good example of the result of educating a man to make money without education having been given his mental and spiritual development.

"In misrepresenting the colored people of the country the man is harming himself the least. I wish to say emphatically that his actions do not meet with my personal approval and I am sure they do not meet with the approval of the colored race."

The fact that Johnson could not be seen for several hours lent color to the story that he was shot in the leg during an altercation in his cafe. The report quickly spread over the city that he had been mortally wounded, but his appearance later dispelled the rumor. After this, however, it was said that he was shot, presumably by a negress, and that calls for a physician disclosed the details to telephone operators.

Telegraphic offers poured in from Texas, Mississippi and other Southern States, offering unlimited sums of money for the defence of the person who was supposed to have fatally shot Johnson.

Girl Still Under Guard.

Miss Cameron the cause of all the trouble, is closely guarded in the Winnebago County Jail at Rockford, Ill. Johnson and his attorney signified their determination of getting in communication with her, but the government had a member of the Department of Justice in the jail to instruct the sheriff what to do in any emergency.

If Johnson could get the girl set free under a $25,000 bond and marry her it would upset the case the government claims to have against him.

When Johnson's wife committed suicide recently there was much genuine sympathy for Johnson, but this has been changed to abhorrence because of the Cameron girl and the fact that she has been wearing the jewels of the dead wife. The battle against Johnson in city, State and Federal courts will be taken up in earnest this week.

Help Us, Plea of Queen Olga Appeals to Women of World

QUEEN OLGA OF GREECE, CZAR'S AUNT.

By GORDON ROSE,
Special Correspondent of the American with the Greek Army.

ATHENS, Oct. 21.—I had the good fortune to travel on the Austria Lloyd steamer Praga from Trinist to Corfu with her majesty, Queen Olga of Greece, from whom I obtained the following exclusive statement for the AMERICAN. Her Majesty traveled with her usual lack of ostentation, accompanied by only one lady-in-waiting and a courier.

It was many years since I had seen her, and I thought I could recognize in her strong, thoughtful face new lines, perhaps, due to the worries and cares of the last few weeks.

Queen Olga, who was the Grand Duchess Olga Constantinovna, aunt of the Czar of Russia, carries herself as one would expect a queen, although dressed entirely in black, the only touch of lightness being that of the hair and the brightness of her face when animated by a smile of recognition.

Her Message to Women.

She spoke to me freely, and declared that it was as a devout Christian that she had a message for the women of Christendom throughout the world. She said:

Greece does not fear to throw herself into the scale; she does not fear what she may lose, nor has she any hope of territorial aggrandizement.

Greece, like the Balkan states, has a sacred duty—that of succoring the Christian women, children and men who are suffering the barbarities of Turkish misrule.

It is a strange phase of history that has made Greece a champion of Christendom, while the great and powerful Christian nations stand aside.

But this is not a question of politics, but of humanity. We can hold no horrors as bad as those of peace under the Turkish flag.

There Will Be Many Widows.

There will be many families in destitution, because those of our bread winners who are not on service with the colors have come forward as volunteers. There will be many widows and many women weeping for sons who will not come back. Privations, perhaps starvation, will be added to the empty chair of him who comes home no more.

Greece will do all she can for her people in distress, but Greece is so small and her distress will be so vast.

Here women will sell their jewels and finery to provide for the fighting men, just as they did in the last war. If the women of the great Christian nations who are not asked to sacrifice their men in this latter day crusade would but sacrifice the smallest fraction of their comforts and luxuries for a few weeks, then our men would fight with lighter hearts, knowing that their dear ones are not starving at home.

The Greeks throughout the world are filled with enthusiasm. From all over Europe and Egypt and from America every incoming ship brings its loads of patriots. Their enthusiasm is so deep that they do not cheer or shout. The grim business on which they come they take earnestly.

Hundreds of Volunteers.

If the enthusiasm and grit of these poor men, who give and risk their all, means anything, there is food for thought in the question of how much civilization has borrowed from Greece. Even Byron's stanzas, as much beloved by Americans as by the English were inspired under Grecian skies.

On this very boat are 300 Greeks returning to Athens, all poor men, traveling in the steerage and packed in the sleeping quarters like sardines. Many of them are volunteers, paying their own passage, their meagre clothing showing how ill they can afford the luxury of patriotism.

As we arrived at Corfu, news was brought on board that war had been formally declared. I stood on the deck, near the Queen, watching the crowds. I looked for cheers, for there were many young students from Austria aboard, but all were silent. I looked for tears, for there were many women, but their eyes were dry.

Only a silent pressure of hands told what the news beiokened, and it was more impressive than any cheering demonstration.

Cheered by People.

The royal yacht awaited the Queen. As she stepped into the pinnace, every soul aboard the steamship and on the quay rushed to the side, every head was bared, but the silence was intense.

The Queen looked up into the crowded lines of faces; for perhaps a minute she stood looking at her people, her strong face alight with unspoken thanks. I fancied I saw diminished tears in her eyes. Then she bowed her head low and passed down the gangway.

A sharp command from the coxswain broke the spell; a great sigh went up from all, but there was no cheer.

As the pinnace moved swiftly away, the Queen bowed many times to the people. Then the boat rounded her prow, and there was a rush, still in silence, to the starboard side. There we all stood, staring until the yacht was lost to view.

I have seen many pre-arranged ceremonies at official functions, but never one so earnest, so unconsciously impressive as this unrehearsed incident.

VICTORY PERCHES ON BALKAN ALLIES' ARMS

200,000 Turks in the city and in the positions still held by the Turks outside the citadel.

Report Mine Killed 500.

BELGRADE, Servia, Oct. 21.—More than 500 Servian soldiers, all members of the Seventh Regiment of Infantry, are reported to have been killed today by the explosion of a Turkish land mine on the frontier of Novibazar.

Greeks Storm Fortress.

ATHENS, Oct. 21.—Crown Prince Constantine's victorious Greek army, which defeated the Turks at Elassom at the foot of Mount Olympus today stormed the Turkish fortress at Sarandaporo pass.

The Turkish army of 7,000 men which was defeated and put to flight after a four-hour battle at Elassona, retreated to the pass, where it joined forces with the Turkish battalion stationed there.

The Greeks used the two batteries of artillery captured from the enemy at Elasson as well as their own cannon.

Servians Take Two Forts.

NISH, Servia, Oct. 21.—Servians captured the heights of Rujan, nine miles south of the Servian frontier on Turkish soil, today, taking possession of two forts and occupying Rujan. Rujan is a town of great strategical importance to the Servians, dominating a mountain pass at that point.

Servians Storm Fort.

BERLIN, Oct. 21.—The Servians added another victory today to their triumphant campaign in the Novitzar when they took the Turkish fort at Novavarosh. Word of the battle was received from Sarajevo. The Turks fought fiercely before being driven out. Novavarosh lies ten miles from Ipspolie and the same distance from the Servian border. It is the chief town on the western plateau of Yavor plains.

CAPTURE OF ADRIANOPLE WOULD IMPERIL CAPITAL

Adrianople, the third city in size in the Ottoman Empire, has long been regarded as the strategic key to European Turkey. It was the capture of Adrianople which practically finished the Russo-Turkish war in 1878 and forced the Porte to sue for peace. The Russian generals regarded the city as the strategic point in the war. But long before that, Adrianople had assumed a place of importance in the military annals of the world, as it was there, in 1829, another war between Russia and Turkey was ended by the Peace of Adrianople.

Military authorities who have studied the plan of action of the Balkan States declared that the keenest military knowledge was shown in the concerted invasion of Turkey, and that the Bulgarian advance on Adrianople was calculated to precipitate a great battle within a day or two which might prove decisive.

On Road to Constantinople.

Strategically considered, no other city would give the Balkan States the opening that would result from the seizure of Adrianople. If the allies succeed in taking Adrianople, Turkey will be practically laid open to the walls of Constantinople.

Long ago recognizing the strategical importance of the town, the Turks have surrounded Adrianople with a network of formidable forts, of which the perimeter is about fifteen miles. The forts are placed in salient positions on the ridgeways of the Tunja valley east and west of the town, which is mostly built on the Tunja River banks.

On the north the defences are joined by connecting forts, which block the approach to the town from this side, but on the south the Maritza River, widening, flows into the open plain through a bankless channel. Here the ground does not lend itself to artificial defense, and this is the weak corner of the Adrianople position and the one from which attack would come. Every detail of the Adrianople defenses is, of course, well known to the Bulgarian general staff, the town containing many Bulgars who are side to keep their government informed of all that takes place in the frontier forts.

Third Largest City.

Situated on both banks of the Tunja river at its confluence with Maritza, Adrianople, which is the third largest city in European Turkey and formerly the capital of the Sultans, is the key to the main highway from Europe to the two larger cities of Sulpolis and Constantinople.

Adrianople is 137 miles northwest of Constantinople, and in 1905 had a population of 80,000, half Turks and half Jews, Bulgarians, Greeks and Armenians. It was called Uskudama until the Roman Emperor, Hadrian, renamed and enlarged it in 117-138. The great Turk, Murad I., captured it in 1361 and the Turkish Sultans ruled their empire from the city until Constantinople fell into their hands in 1453. The Russians held it to two and 1828.

The Balkan allies, once Adrianople is theirs, can march on the route of the Orient railway from Vienna to the very entrance to Constantinople and the Bosphorus. At the same time the flanking of a division of the allied armies to the west to Salonica would cut off Turkish troops in Macedonia and Albania from every big source of supply.

Attack Carefully Planned.

Military experts on the Continent have declared that the Balkan generals were proceeding as if they were playing a game of chess, with just as carefully planned an attack on Turkey, from the north and south. The Servians have concentrated their attention on Uskub, a Turkish stronghold. The Montenegrins are after Scutari, and the Greeks have already pressed across the frontier from the south.

Adrianople is connected by railway with Constantinople, Vienna, Dedeagatch, Yamboli and Sarembey. The Turks call it Edrineh, and to them it is the second capital of their empire. Its military importance is enhanced because of the fact that it has an arsenal, a cannon foundry and iron works. The city's bazaars and caravanserails make it a great centre for Levantine and Asiatic trade.

There are several fine mosques, the most important being that of the Sultan Selim, with four lofty minarets and a rich interior. It is considered the finest Moslem temple extant. The aqueduct which supplies the city is also famous in Southeastern Europe. There are two imperial palaces in the city, forty mosques, baths and numerous public and private gardens along the banks of the River Maritza. Adrianople's trade consists of opium, oil of roses, with silk and other manufactures.

From 1366 to 1453 Adrianople was the capital of the Ottoman empire. The city's name then was Adrianopolis, or Hadrianopolis, after the Roman Emperor Hadrian. The city is the capital of the vilayet or province of Adrianople, of which the population is a million and a half.

President Elected on Nov. 2—That Is by Wellesley Girls

The presidential election will be held November 2, Saturday, this year—at Wellesley.

Of course, the "big snow" comes the following Tuesday—"the first Tuesday after the first Monday"—but Wellesley girls don't let that bother them. Whether they plan to vote for the Bull Moose or not, they're progressive enough to lead in the date of their quadrennial presidential election.

Every presidential year Wellesley likes a vote, under the Australian ballot system, for President. Wilson, Roosevelt, Taft, Debs and the others will be listed on the tickets which the girls will mark.

October 25 and November 1, meetings will be held in the Tower Hall, when the cause of the different candidates will be pleaded. John Graham Brooks will speak for the Progressives, John A. Curtin for the Republicans, and Mrs. Florence Kelley for the Socialists.

Then girls, whose identity is a dark secret, will appear, dressed and disguised to represent the different candidates, and in impassioned "night-before" speeches will appeal for the votes of their fair constituents. The election follows on November 2, after the field day events in the morning.

It is customary, after the result is known, for the successful factions to hold a celebration, with speeches, red fire, and the usual accessories. Also, the result is wired to Mr. Wilson, Mr. Taft, Mr. Roosevelt, or whoever may win on the girls' vote.

FAT MEN'S CLUB TO ELECT TONIGHT

The United States Fat Men's Club will elect officers at the Revere House tonight. Mayor Fitzgerald and John L. Sullivan are expected to be guests.

PICK WELLESLEY CLASS TEAMS

Teams have been selected at Wellesley to represent the different classes in the annual field day events for the class championship.

The teams constitute the best athletes of the three upper classes. The meet, which will take place November 2, will be open only to those directly connected with Wellesley College, and will make the close of outdoor organized sports until Spring.

It will be the final season in all outdoor athletics except rowing, which will have its final season next Spring. The field day events will be confined to tennis, field hockey, running basket-ball, archery and golf. Teams from the three upper classes only will take part, freshmen being excluded from the competition in these sports until Spring.

The senior class teams picked are:

Tennis—Misses N. Brewster of Minneapolis, C. Buell of Wellesley Hills, G. Coe of Trenton, N. J.; R. Curtis of Ossining, N. Y., B. Harrison of Montclair, N. J., S. Resh of Somerset, O.; L. Thomas of Niles, O.; Olive Tripp of South Hingham.

Hockey—Misses Florence McCready, Andover; B. Brown, Philadelphia; E. Stratton, Moylan, Pa.; M. Mitchell, Bostonia, N. J.; Helen Paul, Philadelphia; M. Leavitt, Gorham, Me.; Helen South, Philadelphia; Beatrice Van Slyck, Lawrin, Mich.; M. Adams, Fergus Falls, Minn.; C. Heanie, Detroit.

Basketball—Misses M. Cowes, Worcester; J. Colon, Charlotte, N. C.; H. Keeler, Somerville; Helen Brant, Brooklyn, N. Y.; Mary Humphrey, West New Brighton, N. Y.; A. Rose, Palisfield, N. J.

Running—Misses Lucille Bachman, Port Henry, N. Y.; M. Chapman, Portland, Me.; H. Davis, Lynn; L. Elliott, Bedington, N. J.; E. Leavitt, Gorham, Me.; Tilla Mercarten, Lancaster, N. H.; F. Moore, Arlington; Helen Richardson, Brighton.

The taste of food is an important aid to digestion.

When food is flat and tasteless it is only half masticated, in our hurry to "get it down." Once "down" it only starts trouble.

But the savory bite that looks good—smells good and tastes good, exites salivation and prolongs mastication.

Tasty food is thoroughly "chewed" to get all the flavor. Normal and quick digestion is then a certainty.

15,000 HONOR NEWSBOY WHO GAVE LIFE FOR GIRL

"He Saved Others, Himself He Could Not Save."
—Billy Bugh's Funeral Text.

GARY, Ind., Oct. 21.—"Billy" Bugh was buried today. Fifteen thousand people paid tribute to him. For Billy, a crippled "newsboy," gave his twisted leg to save a girl he had never seen, and thus giving cost Billy his life.

They had planned an impressive church service for Billy. But the people—the great throng who flocked to honor the man, who was a man, for all his title of "newsboy"—ordered otherwise.

As the hearse bore Billy's body toward the church the men and women and children gathered about it, weeping, struggling nearer to lay a hand on the coffin, or toss a wreath of flowers in the vehicle. The throng became thicker and thicker, till finally the carriage could no longer advance.

The church service was abandoned. The coffin was placed on low rests in the middle of the street, and after it had been opened men spoke, enoughing the dead hero to all listeners, who stood with bared or bowed heads, sobbing softly to themselves.

"BILLY BUGH, ONE WHO LOVED FELLOW-MEN," TRIBUTE TO NEWSBOY

Why do ye thousands block the streets of Gary?

A man is dead! But men die every day.

And this man was only a "newsboy."

Yes, friends, only a newsboy. Yet he made the great sacrifice. He risked his life—then gave it, that a girl whom he never knew, might live.

His was the sacrifice of one who loved his fellow-men. This was the spirit of Billy Bugh—the Spirit of Self Sacrifice. Sermon preached over Billy Bugh's casket in a Gary street.

Funeral in Open Air.

So Billy's funeral was in the open air, where his life had been spent. Billy had often said that when he died in Bugh's honor, went as they formed in line with their employers and walked slowly past the casket of the dead newsboy. "Never, My God, to Thee," they sang. Their wives and children were with them, and many stretched forth their hands in an effort to express their reverence by offering money for the erection of a monument.

Policemen found difficulty in explaining to hundreds of the mourners who could not speak English, that they must not shower the coffin with money, but must keep it until arrangements for the memorial tribute could be made.

A space was cleared in the centre of the street, and there, upon low rests, the casket was placed.

Led by the church choir and with music furnished by two bands that had donated their services, the crowd sang old gospel hymns as the Rev. J. M. Avann stepped into the carriage and utilized its seat as his pulpit. Throngs of persons upon near-by porches and roofs joined in the singing.

"Rugh, Christ-Like."

The pastor likened the dead hero to Christ.

"He saved others, yet Himself He could not save." was his text.

What means this concourse of people? Why have you souls of Gary been touched as never before? Why do ye thousands block the streets of Gary? We are told a man is dead. Why, men die every day. Yet this man had no office and was almost unknown. He was only a newsboy. But he made the great sacrifice. He risked his life—then gave it—that a girl whom he never knew might live. His was the sacrifice of one who loved his fellow man. This was the spirit of Bugh—the spirit of self-sacrifice.

Tears dimmed the eyes of thousands as they united in singing "Jesus, Lover of My Soul." Then the Rev. J. A. McClenahan, pastor of the Tabor Presbyterian Church, delivered a brief prayer.

A path was cleared on either side of the casket and it was opened that the thousands might have a last view of the dead man's face. For nearly an hour the double lines of sorrowers passed by.

Among those who passed were Charless Smith and his two sons. It was Ethel Smith, his nineteen-year-old daughter, whose life was saved by Bugh's self-sacrifice. She was unable to attend.

day, Billy weakened and died, smiling, brave and grateful to the end.

Strong men of many races, workers in steel mills that were closed in Bugh's honor, went as they formed in line with their employers and walked slowly past the casket of the dead newsboy. "Never, My God, to Thee," they sang. Their wives and children were with them, and many stretched forth their hands in an effort to express their reverence by offering money for the erection of a monument.

Great'est Robber of the Pay Envelope—Drink

A Renovaiaer Woman Says Anti-Jag Means Full Pay Envelopes

This is her experience—her own story in her own words. "I hope you will excuse me for keeping your letter so long as I have, but as it was near time for my husband to be paid again, I thought it best to wait and see how he acted, as he only drinks on the day he is paid. I am thanking to say he came home on the other two different pay days."

Has this any significance for the family that is deprived of necessities and comforts because some one spends half his pay on drink? The remedy the Renovaiaer woman writes about is Renova and you can get it at Riker-Jaynes' and put it in his tea or coffee and he won't know a thing about it, for it is tasteless and absolutely harmless. If there's a drinker in your family get it—get it right away—give it to him secretly, or by way at all—but give him Renova as we know if very soon you're not the happiest family in the world.

If you'd like to try it—free—before you buy a whole package, write in confidence to the Renova Co., 204 Broadway, New York, for a sample and proofs of what Renova does for victims of intemperance.

We Are Running a Series of 100 All Day Tuesday Sales

The series began two weeks ago and became an immediate success. Last week the sales were a greater success than those of the opening week. The public understands the logic of our reasons for giving greater value than any others. It is a simple problem to figure that four stores can buy and sell merchandise cheaper than any individual store. The United Purchasing Power of the four Siegel stores in Boston, New York and Chicago, buying and selling in quantities that would stagger 10 ordinary stores, securing extra discounts and big price concessions, stands today the biggest and most important factor in the retail business of the United States. Your motto should be "Save and Profit by the Siegel United Purchasing Power."

Here's Startling Proof of the Ability of the Four Great Siegel Stores to Buy and Sell Cheaper Than Any Individual Store

This is an actual sketch of some of the many styles.

Sale No. 12 of the 100 Series of Tuesday Sales

A Remarkable All-Day Tuesday Opportunity to Buy An $18.50 or a $19.75 New Fall Coat for $9.98

All Sizes for Women—All Sizes for Misses

We want to say emphatically that any other store selling such coats for $18.50 or $19.75 is not charging the smallest fraction of a dollar too much.

If you respond to this amazing bargain, you'll go away coat happy and you'll have half your coat money for other purposes.

It's the greatest sale we ever heard of at the beginning of the season. The styles, materials and workmanship will be a positive sensation tomorrow at $9.98.

All of the prevailing models are shown, from 54-inch braid bound coats to full length, trimmed garments. The latest Fall and Winter style tendencies are expressed in most attractive variety. The trimmings embrace braid effects, belted backs, gathered backs, velvet collars and many others.

The materials are boucle cloth, both solid colors and fancy two-toned effects, blanket cloths, with check back, chinchilla, plain check and plaid backs; also a very extensive variety of mixtures.

The colors are navy, black, brown, gray, tan and other color effects.

Sizes 34 to 44 for women, 14 to 18 for misses.

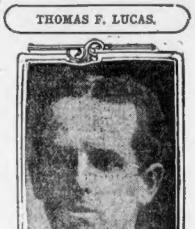
Get Busy! Big Contest Is On!

Join Prosperity Procession!

THOMAS F. LUCAS.



Somerville conductor, member of carmen's Union, plans to make every day count

Somebody will get $10,000. Why not get in line and turn spare time into good hard cash?

By THE CONTEST EDITOR.

Join the prosperity procession.

Do it today!

Let the Boston AMERICAN'S $40,000 Contest be your guide.

Spare hours put into this competition ena. through a successful candidacy, bring you back such Crosus-like returns as a cash prize of $10,000, or $1,000, or $500, or $250, or $150, or $100 or any one of 1,500 other great awards.

The AMERICAN'S $40,000 Contest offers you a chance to earn $10,000, and to receive it in one lump sum in nineteen weeks more.

By your votes shall you be known! For remember that vote rank will determine the distribution of these big prizes.

There are just two ways to get votes. One is to save the coupons which appear in the daily and Sunday AMERICAN, and the other way—the quickest way, the one that produces the best results—is to obtain subscriptions to the Sunday AMERICAN.

"Get Busy! Do it Now!"

No one who is not "fixed for life," can afford to overlook this opportunity to earn $10,000.

The way to insure placing this in a bank to Your account is to "get busy." File up votes and subscriptions in this wonderful competition.

Only four weeks now remain to capture one of the big Special Cash prizes offered as an extra inducement for Extra Work during the next four weeks.

These special prizes are explained in detail in an advertisement in today's AMERICAN. Turn to this now, and then get out and among your friends, neighbors and acquaintances and try and get one subscription from each one of them.

What are you doing with your spare time? Here is a way to invest it—with a probable return of $10,000 if you will but go at the work in hand seriously with ambition and with enthusiasm.

The problem to all of your financial problems is here before you. Do you know of any better way, or any quicker way, to secure for yourself and those dear to you such a huge sum of money as $10,000 in gold coin?

Turn Time Into Cash.

Most people have more time than money on their hands. Convert some of this spare time into good hard cash. Some one will get it and get $10,000 for doing it. Why not You?

You can be your own "boss," you can be independent if you are successful in this contest.

Give just two hours a day to the work of procuring subscriptions and there is no reason why you should not be reckoned with among the final winners.

Next Sunday we will print an entire page of candidates pictures. The best way in the world is for everyone know that you are a candidate for the $10,000 is to have your picture among those printed next Sunday.

If you haven't a suitable picture come in and get an order for one which will entitle you to a sitting at the Otto Sarony Company, No. 146 Tremont street, Boston. If unable to call for this order, send for it by mail.

The first vote list will appear IMMEDIATELY after the close of the big Special Offer. Only subscriptions and votes received up to Nov. 16th at 10 P. M. will be counted in compiling this first list. This means now or never in the race for $10,000, because a position with the leaders in the first list means SUCCESS—a tail-end position in the first list means a hard up-hill fight.

Lucas Out to Win.

Thomas F. Lucas of No. 15 Richardson street, Somerville, is one of the claimants for the $10,000 reward. He is a member of the Boston Car Men's Union and is employed as a conductor by the Boston Elevated Railroad. He says:

"I am not worrying about 'the other fellow.' It does not matter to me what any one else does. I am in this race to capture the $10,000, and I will do what I can in my spare time each day. My friends will help me.

"I discovered a short time ago that while I was worrying about 'the other fellow' my own campaign was being neglected. From now on let every man look out for himself. I propose to worry about Lucas' campaign, and if others wish to worry about me, then they have lost just so much valuable time, that's all. 'Make every day count' is my motto."

BOY IS SENTENCED TO SUNDAY SCHOOL

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 27.—Walter Hayes, fifteen years old, had the alternative of going to jail or to Sunday School when he was arraigned before Magistrate Toales in the Juvenile Court. Hayes and a number of his companions have recently been annoying patrons of the Rapid Transit Company in Germantown. Hayes grabbed the hat of the Rev. George W. Lincoln, rector of the Episcopal Church of St. John the Baptist, and made off with it. He was arrested and took a sentence of fifteen consecutive Sundays in Sunday School.

Auto News

By J. C. KERRISON.

Highly interesting and exhaustive experiments involving for the first time the use of the automobile in wireless telephony have recently been made by H. C. Hanson of Los Angeles. The results obtained have created a sensation among the followers of this line of science on the coast where Mr. Hanson is regarded as one of the most capable amateur in the wireless field. One of the most recent experiments was the receipt on Lookout Mountain of a message sent over the ranges from Long Beach, thirty miles away. The car used was an 8-CH 1912 type, current being supplied by the lighting storage battery with which the car is equipped.

Proper loading is a big factor in prolonging the life of motor trucks, in the opinion of Harry S. Houpt, general sales manager of the American Locomotive Company automobile department. "How to secure the right distribution of a load, and the effect of good balance of weight in preserving the springs, tires and other features of mechanism, are told by Mr. Houpt in the following suggestions to motor truck drivers:

"Do not place all the heavy articles on the rear of the truck. If you place a heavy article on the rear of the truck, place an article of like weight on the front also.

"If you have a small and heavy load such as steel rails, use a small body. Have the body constructed so that the load will be centred. If a tank body is used to haul over rough roads, it should be made only large enough to carry a normal load. Don't overload. If the body is too big, don't load the truck to the capacity of the body."

President J. I. Hanley of the American Motors Company, which produces the American underslung car, is in town accompanied by F. J. Rowan, who was recently appointed district sales manager of the American Motors Company for the East. These two officials were the guests of Messrs. Roberts and Sherburne, who recently took hold of the American underslung in this city and who have in such a short time met with great success.

CARPENTIER IS IN BIG DEMAND

By ED. W. SMITH.

There is one grand big card in European rings at the present time. His name is Georges Carpentier and it appears to be the aim of every high-class boxer anywhere near his weight to get on a match with him. Billy Papke is booked up with him, and such men as Bombardier Wells and others are pointing themselves in the general direction of the smart young Frenchman.

Just what Papke will do with Carpentier or what Carpentier will do to Papke is a big guess. It all depends upon whether Papke is found to be better in Paris than he showed in New York recently. The critics did not credit the Kewanee man with having a great deal of "smoke" or skill, but it was his first action in a long time and perhaps Bill will improve in his training for the big match.

Willing to Box Wells.

The marvelous confidence that the French have in Carpentier is shown in no firmer fashion than in their efforts to get Bombardier Wells to meet him. The English star is a man of 190 pounds at the very least and Georges' nerve in conceding that much weight to an admittedly great boxer is convincing. But the match hasn't been made yet.

Carpentier has endeared himself to the French people not alone because he is the greatest boxer that nation ever produced, but in a dozen other ways. In a recent athletic meet he entered against some of the best of the French all-around men and came out with flying colors. A run of five feet four inches in the running high jump, covered eighteen feet and two inches in the broad jump, and then won both the 100 and 400 metre races in splendid time, showing that Carpentier is a great all-around man. He won the weight putting contest with thirty feet and would have won the 1,500-metre run but for an unfortunate fall near the tape.

Calls Him an Apollo.

The French claim that Carpentier is of the ideal build for any sort of athletics. Here is what a French writer in an English paper has to say of him:

"The boy's symmetry is strangely reminiscent of Praxiteles' Apollo, that characteristic Greek god that represents the ideal of manhood. To look at Carpentier is to see all the supple grace of the greyhound allied with the strength and tenacity of a bull-terrier. Without being overburdened with knots of herculean muscles, the boy will surely develop into that which is far more picturesque—the refined type of athlete who cannot only become champion boxer but hold his own at nearly any other form of sport. Not alone specialists, of course, but when competing with all-round athletes. He proved that on this occasion. The more especially so as the boy had never before attempted aught but boxing.

"Carpentier's build is such that he would have succeeded more or less as a pay form of athletics had his mind turned to any other than mitt-wielding. Boxing is, however, his natural element. It is to him even like water to the duckling, and he took to it as readily. There is no doubt that the boy was born with the science of the noble art in his veins."

Klaus for the Winner.

It is understood on this side that Frank Klaus already has been matched to meet the winner of the contest between Papke and Carpentier.

But that Carpentier is seriously contemplating a trip to this country is shown by his replies to New York promoters. He has agreed to come over here and box McGeorty in December if the proper terms are made for him.

On the other hand, both Dan McKetrick and Frank Erne, who represent French boxing clubs in this country, have made McGeorty offers to go over and fight him. Erne offered McGeorty $6,000 and all expenses for two and McGeorty is seriously considering it.

Sidelights on Sports

By A. H. C. MITCHELL.

Exit the ball players.
Enter fan magnates.
Rows between the owners of big league ball clubs get but scant mention in the newspapers while the championship season is on. The public is not interested. The baseball reporters have no time and little newspaper space for the squabbles of the men who control the destinies of the big league clubs. Summer rows there are in plenty, but they come and go as Summer squalls.

The Joe Woods, Tris Speakers, Ty Cobbs, Mathewsons, Marquards and Schultes of the diamond are the headliners of the baseball stage. The magnates play the supper trick in the Summer time. But once the season is over, the players disappear and the magnates claim the spotlight.

You are invited to read a few words about the two magnates that have stirred the National League. This old organization would not be happy unless it had a row or two on its hands, with a feud and a Donnybrook fair as side attractions. The American League has its dissentions, too, but it has the good sense to settle them privately. Ban Johnson, president of the league, sees to that. But the National Leaguers love newspaper notoriety as a hunting dog loves the smell of gunpowder.

The cases that are now claiming the attention of the National League are those of Horace Fogel, president of the Philadelphia club, and of John T. Brush, president of the New York club. Fogel is to be kicked out of the National League. His fellow magnates have made up their minds to do it, and there seems to be no hope for Horace. Fogel overplayed himself in his pet role of umpire baiter.

Newspapers printed interviews with Horace early this month in which he was quoted as saying the National League race was fixed for the New York club to win the pennant. President Tom Lynch promptly brought charges against Fogel, and the National League magnates have called upon Fogel for his proofs. If he fails to make good he will be kicked out of the league.

Fogel is close to fifty years old. He is a peculiar man. For years he was baseball editor of the Philadelphia Public Ledger when the late George W. Childs owned the publication. After Mr. Childs' death, he went to another newspaper and continued to write baseball. He was one of the most prolific writers in captivity. Not only did he write copious words about every known angle of baseball, but he wrote largely of himself.

He used to claim that Connie Mack cheated not make a move until he had asked the advice of Horace Fogel. He carried this self-esteem to laughable extremes. For example: Seated one day at the typewriter, he was weary and ill at ease. He accordingly exhausted all his schemes to pat himself on the back. Suddenly the inspiration came. He wrote a scurrilous letter to himself and signed it with some fictitious name. He printed this letter in his sporting column and underneath it penned the alleged writer from Dan to Beersheba, wiading up somewhat as follows:

"The writer of this abusive attack on me is a coward who hides under an assumed name. He cannot be found in the directory or in the telephone book. But if he has a spark of manhood in him he will meet me at the corner of Broad and Chestnut streets at 2 o'clock this afternoon. If he shows up, I promise to give him the chastisement he so richly deserves."

At 2 o'clock Horace appeared at the place appointed by himself to meet the alleged writer of the letter written by himself. With clothes freshly pressed, a boutonniere in the lapel of his coat and swinging a slight cane, Horace paced back and forth, to the admiring comments of the bon police. Of course no antagonist showed himself. After a reasonable length of time Horace proceeded to his office and wrote somewhat in this strain:

"I was at the corner of Broad and Chestnut at 2 o'clock, as I said I would be. I waited half an hour and then an extra fifteen minutes, but the coward who wrote that scurrilous letter to me had not the manhood to appear. It is just as well for him that he didn't."

When the Philadelphia baseball club was reorganized about three years ago, Horace, with the aid of some friends, secured control of the organization. For all his oddities, his fellow newspaper workers considered him harmless and well liked as all they could. But no sooner had the playing season started than Horace conceived the idea that one or two of the umpires were giving his team the worst of it, and he began to talk as he used to write, most copiously.

At first baseball reporters printed what he said, but it soon became tiresome and finally they paid no attention to him. Horace fired off upon ream of signed statements at the newspapers. They were all dropped in the waste basket. At last, Horace went to Chicago and secured the car of a new baseball reporter. The cub thought it was great news and Horace unburdened himself. While he was at it, he made a fine job of it. The result was President Lynch got after him and the chances are about 100 to 1 (with Horace on the short end) that Horace is canned from the league.

Like the goat in the famous cartoon, Horace talks too —— much.

This Fogel case is enough to keep the National League magnates busy for a time, but on top of it comes the refusal of John T. Brush to pay the National League 25 per cent. of the world's series receipts. It is good betting that when John T. says he won't do a thing he could be induced to between Brush and Fogel as magnates in the different cities heard and sarsaparilla. It is true the National League voted last Winter to assess the players 25 per cent. of their series receipts, but Mr. Brush claims the league had no right to vote away the New York club's money.

The other magnates are emitting yells that can be heard from one end of the country, but John T. has not yet been seen. He is crafty. Too ill to even see a world's series game at the Polo Grounds, Mr. Brush is nevertheless the most powerful man in the National League. John T. is a bird. He is an eagle. Fogel is a bird, too, but he is only a sparrow.

These two birds promise to give the other National League magnates all the work they can attend to up to the time set for the annual meeting of the league—the holding of December. The opening betting on their chances of winning is as follows:

Brush	1 to 100
Fogel	100 to 1

ALL BOWLING LEAGUE STANDINGS IN THE BOSTON AMERICAN

Secretaries, or official scorers, of bowling leagues in Greater Boston are requested to send to the Boston AMERICAN the standings of the clubs as early each week as possible for publication in the Sunday AMERICAN. Proprietors of bowling alleys are invited to forward a list of leagues using their alleys. Bowling news of the teams or individuals participating in the sport is welcomed at all times. Secretaries are also requested to send along their bowling schedules for this season. Address BOWLING EDITOR, Boston American.

PLAYERS VOTE TO BAR ROWDIES

NEW YORK, Oct. 21.—The Baseball Players' Fraternity, recently organized among the players of the National and American League, met on Sunday at the office of David L. Fultz, 30 Wall street. Both the Boston Nationals and the Boston Americans failed to send representatives and Cleveland has not enrolled in the organization. The election of officers resulted as follows:

President David L. Fultz, New York city; vice-presidents, Christopher Mathewson, New York Nationals, and Michael J. Doolan of the Philadelphia Nationals; Tyrus R. Cobb, Detroit, and Edward Sweeney of the New York Americans; secretary, Joseph E. Dashiell, Brooklyn; board of directors, one player from each club.

The board of directors will be increased with representatives from the two Boston clubs at the next meeting.

It was voted to ask the National commission to embody a clause in its regulations vesting power in all fraternity to eject from baseball grounds any person using insulting and abusive language to the players.

The fraternity also went on record as opposed to rowdyism by players on the playing field, the violation of contracts with clubs, and all acts tending to impair the playing ability of its members.

Notes of the Alleys

Although the City League bowling season has just turned its third week the fight for first place is growing into a warm affair, and it can be readily seen that one or two of the teams will be left behind unless they do better work within the next few weeks.

All thoughts of the race being a one team affair has been driven from the minds of the City League followers by this time —or at least they should. Many old stars have passed out this season, and many new ones entered. Prominent among the latter are Paul Poehler, Archie Walsh and Chet Martel, who are classed among the best candle-pin men in New England.

Poehler is the present individual champion of New England, he having gained that title by winning the Boston AMERICAN championship tournament at the New Boston Alleys last season. With Walsh he has aided considerably in bringing Chancey to the front, and it would not be surprising to see Bill Beatty's aggregation in the lead within a very short time.

It looks as though Don MacPhee's successful efforts in landing Casino a place in the City League have not been wasted. Don has a team that he may well be proud of, and one which is sure to be a big trouble-maker before the season has advanced much further.

Adams Square, the present leader, is another team which must be considered. George Littlefield has a likely looking bunch of men—and all pluggers, too—who can stand the gaff. Of the other teams Murray and Carruth are slowly but surely making good headway.

The Newspaper League will begin its second week at the Adams Square alleys this afternoon, while the Odd Fellows League roll at those alleys this evening. Two matches will be held in the Elite League at the Elite alleys.

A meeting will be held by the Massachusetts Catholic Order of Foresters of the Greater Boston District at Hamilton Hall, Dorchester, tomorrow evening. A schedule of matches will be arranged for the newly formed league, under that name, which starts the ball rolling shortly.

WORLD SERIES HEROES

HUGH BEDIENT—No. 2

Boston fans should be as thankful to Hugh Bedient, the youthful pitcher who triumphed over the great Mathewson in the fourth game of the world's pennant struggle as they are to Joe Wood or any other individual of the Red Sox outfit for bringing a championship to the Hub.

Bedient was one of the big surprises of the series. It was known that he was a sterling pitcher, and he was counted on to add his team materially.

Still he was not rated nearly as valuable as the renowned Wood, and few believed him capable of putting up a contest such as he did when he faced Big Six at his best.

Joe Wood Gets Credit.

Joe Wood is credited with winning three of the four games that earned the Red Sox players the big end of the prize money simply because of the system used in compiling pitchers' records, one that is not fair under all conditions.

Hugh Bedient did as much toward winning the deciding game for the Red Sox as Joe Wood, if not more.

It was he who started the game and held the Giants at bay for seven innings. Tyen Shall lifted him only because he wished to use a pinch hitter.

Wood labored only three innings to get the verdict, and but for the poor fielding of the Giants would have been charged with the defeat of that all-important contest.

All told, Bedient contributed sixteen innings of as excellent pitching as the Red Sox have been favored with at any time toward gaining them the title. Just two runs were made off him in that stretch, the result of two hits that were widely scattered, in his first game he allowed only four hits and had the Giants completely baffled with his puzzling delivery.

Beats Christy Mathewson.

In his second appearance, against Matty he was less formidable, but still mighty effective, and the Giants never touched up for six hits in seven innings the Giants could get only one man over the plate on him, because every time they threatened he tightened up wonderfully.

Bedient is still a stripling in big league form.

This was his first season with the Sox, which first introduced him to fast company in the Fall of 1910, when he was drafted from the Fall River club, with which he made his professional debut.

But he remained in the big league just long enough to hang his hat in the club house.

When the 1911 season began Bedient was released to Providence, and became one of their best pitchers, sharing honors with Lavender, now the Cub's star spitballer.

Jersey City purchased him at the close of the season, and a month later sold him to the Red Sox.

This Spring he started out like a wonder, aiding Wood greatly in pushing the team to the front after the White Sox blew up.

About mid-season Hugh took unto himself a bride. When he failed to maintain the winning pace that he displayed in his early games Boston fans became peeved and claimed he should not have tried to be the game of love and baseball at the same time.

Hugh Did His Share.

It didn't take him long to recover his form, however, and in the closing days of the campaign he again did his share in keeping his team far ahead.

Bedient is a New Yorker, inasmuch as he he was born and raised in the Empire State.

Falconer, N.Y., located in Chautauqua County, is the town that claims him as one of its highly prized citizens, and it was there that he first played the game as a member of a schoolboy team.

Bedient will celebrate his twenty-third birthday Wednesday. The residents of Falconer have laid in a big supply of firecrackers in anticipation of celebrating the event.

He was born October 23, 1889. Just two days before Joe Wood, his famed team mate, saw the light of day.

There seems to be a very bright future in store for Bedient on the diamond, but the player knows the length of his baseball days, and in this the youthful Boston star is wise.

He plans ahead for the time when he will have outlived his usefulness as a player. Part of his prize money secured in the world's series will pay for his tuition in a law college, and in a few years he hopes to be admitted to the bar.

FINE BILLIARD SEASON AHEAD

NEW YORK, Oct. 21.—The billiard season has opened. The inaugural took place last Wednesday when William F. Hoppe played an exhibition game with Harry F. Cline at the Amateur Billiard Club. They engaged in an 18-2 game and Hoppe defeated Cline by a score of 400 to 200. Hoppe made a high run of 122 and averaged 21-10.

The outlook for a brilliant season of billiards is very bright and there is much activity both in amateur and professional circles. Next Thursday night Edward W. Gardner and J. Ferdinand Poggenburg will compete in the grand hall of the Arion Society for the Interstate Challenge Cup. The Monday following a metropolitan handicap for amateurs will begin at Maurice Daly's rooms. Early next month Alfred de Oro, champion, and Frank Sherman of Washington, challenger, will play for the professional pocket billiard championship at Doyle's. On November 11 a professional tournament to establish the new world's champion at 18-2 billiards will begin at the Hotel Astor, and later John Horgan and John Daly will have to play for the three cushion championship.

The entrants at Daly's include Poggenburg, Gershul, Thomson, Muldaur, Conway and Hinke. A novel feature will be that the freeze rule will be abrogated. Daly insists that the rule is a relic of antiquity that imposes a hardship on good players who, after having the balls together by well-created shots, suffer because the one ball and some object ball refuse to contact. He proposes to let the players decide whether they will play directly at the ball to which the cue ball may be frozen or before playing have the frozen ball separated with a sheet of paper.

Koji Yamada, the Japanese expert, who has entered for the world's championship, has notified the promoters by cablegram that he will remain in Berlin to practice and will be a passenger on the steamship Kronprinz Wilhelm, which sails from Hamburg October 29. H. A. Wright, a former amateur champion, who now is in San Francisco, may enter the tournament.

Al Taylor, formerly of Chicago, and now a resident of Milwaukee, has forwarded his entry for the 18-2 tournament.

KOHLEMAINEN BEATS MARATHON RECORD

NEW YORK, Oct. 21.—Willie Kohlemainen, the winner of the 1912 Scottish Marathon, emblematic of the championship of the world, added to his already long list of records the fastest time ever made by any runner when he defeated Hans Holmer, the holder of the world's best record, at the historic distance of 26 miles 385 yards in the American professional championship Marathon at the Eastern Motordrome track, Newark, when he covered the route in 2h. 30m. 30 1-5s., the former mark having been 2h. 32m. 21s.

Red Sox Stars Turn to the Footlights

The Red Sox stars, "Pinch" Henriksen, "Buck" O'Brien and Hugh Bradley, made their first appearance of the season Monday on the stage at the National Theatre this afternoon.

The afternoon performance was really just a curtain raiser, though, for tonight the regular routers will do the honors and give the quartet a royal sendoff for their Winter's touring.

Jerry McCarthy, who is "some singer" himself, according to all reports, is scheduled to drop in some afternoon after school and help out on the choruses.

Musical Director Bart Grady of the National Orchestra is directing the rehearsals and assisted in making up a singing act guaranteed to make a hit.

TO DEFINE BULLDOG FOR ALL NATIONS

At the recent show of the British Bulldog Club at Leeds, there was a general meeting of the Federation of the Allied Bulldog Clubs of the United Kingdom. Other clubs which have notified their accession to membership include the Bulldog Club de France, the Vereinigter Oesterreichischer Bulldog Klub, with headquarters in Vienna, and the South African Bulldog Club. The federation proposes to draw up a uniform standard and description of the pure bred bulldog, which will be free for the use an edification of all lovers of the breed, unhampered by the present complications of copyright.

For a starter, the world's indoor championships in sprint racing will be decided. Novelty races and a six-day race, bringing together the pick of the bike men of the world, are to be other features.

In the sprint championships England, France, Germany, Italy and Australia will be represented. Frank Kramer will wear the colors of the United States, along with several of his rivals.

Red Sox Generous With Series Coin

The Boston Red Sox, champions of the world, are generous. Almost the first thing they did with the $4,024.70 which each player received ashis share of the World's Series proceeds was to set aside a sum for gifts. The players pooled $2,000 for this purpose.

Jerome Kelley, ground keeper at Fenway Park, received $175; Edward Riley, the club's clerk, received $500, and John Harrison, also a clerk, got a sum almost as large; Joe Quirk, the team's trainer, received $500, and the man who washed the player's uniforms, the head usher at Fenway Park and others were well remembered.

Little Joery McCarthy, the club's mascot, got an entirely new wardrobe of clothing and a bank book showing a deposit to his credit.

The circulation of the AMERICAN is 300,000 more than its next highest competitor and 100,000 more than all the other evening papers of Boston combined.

Royal Welcome Home for Pitcher Collins

BURLINGTON, Vt., Oct. 21.—When Ray Collins reached Burlington his home town, he was met at the train by a brass band and a big crowd of citizens and students of the University of Vermont, who were on hand to extend the glad hand to the Red Sox twirler. Mrs. Collins accompanied her husband.

When Collins alighted from the train he was given a big ovation by the students and escorted in a waiting auto and with the band leading the procession moved up College street to Ray's home on Brooks avenue. There Collins made a short speech, in which he expressed his disappointment at not being able to bring home a game.

Collins spoke feelingly of the reception he had received from his townsmen.

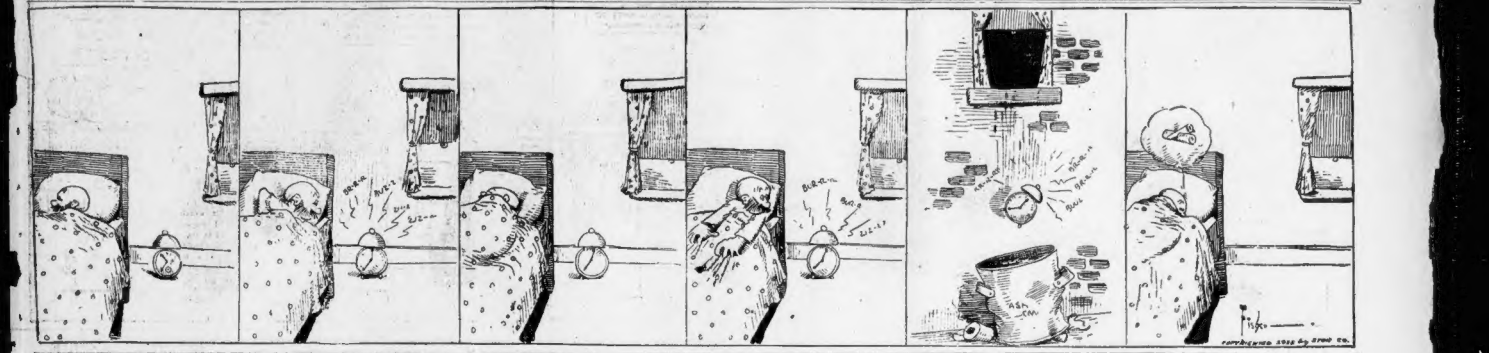
HARVARD WORKING HARD FOR BATTLE AGAINST BROWN

Did You Ever Have One of Those Repeating Alarm Clocks?

By "Bud" Fisher



BROWN-HARVARD NEXT BIG GAME

Harvard will be busy all this week preparing for the first big game of the season with Brown next Saturday.

The Crimson look for victory over the Brunonians by a comfortable margin. All the players came through Saturday's walkaway with Amherst in good shape, so that Trainer Donovan need worry only about the "invalids" already in camp, including Captain Wendell.

The Harvard leader and his "tin" ear is causing the Harvard following many anxious moments, and if there is the slightest danger of it being relapsed Captain Wendell will not play.

The work of Trumbull at guard Saturday earned the approval of the coaches. He is sure to find a place somewhere on the eleven. Coolidge, a new man at end, and Bradlee, who took Wendell's place, also showed to good advantage during the matinee.

Coaches Fish, Withington and Daly will be on hand this week, and will demonstrate what virtues and what flaws they detected in Yale's play against West Point.

Charley Hann, who witnessed the Dartmouth-Williams struggle, also gleaned some potent facts on the Dartmouth method of attack. Lieutenant Graves, now coaching at West Point, may come to Cambridge for a short while and help get the rush line into condition to withstand the battering that it will have to face in the big clashes that are due for next month.

YALE'S TRACK COACHES.

Because Johnny Mack is devoting most of his time to training the Yale football team this fall the direction of track athletics will be in the hands of Coach Flanagan and Dr. Woodbine. Hitherto there has been no coach for Yale's track men in the Fall and it is believed that with a competent director it will be possible to develop material in the Fall and leave the polishing up work for Mack in the Spring.

Indian Eleven to Oppose Canadians

CARLISLE, Pa., Oct. 21.—Steps are being taken toward arranging a series of international football contests between Canada and America. The University of Toronto, champions of Canada at Rugby, has challenged the Carlisle Indians, as representatives of America.

The dare has been formally accepted by the Indians, and the first game will be played at Toronto on October 28. American intercollegiate rules will govern the game, which will be patronized by royalty and officialdom, this day being a triple holiday. Toronto will invite America's leading football authorities to witness the game.

Toronto officials saw the Pittsburgh-Carlisle game at Pittsburgh yesterday. They believe that with proper coaching in American rules and restrictions they can outplay the Indians. It is likely that the contest may lead to games between England and America to decide superiority of these authors at the national game.

Athletic Notes

James E. Sullivan will announce in a few days when the national indoor championships will be held. It is almost a foregone conclusion that the big meet will be staged in one of the local armories.

At a meeting of the Senior Metropolitan Cross Country Committee, it was decided to allow the club belonging to the Metropolitan Association which offered the most advantageous terms for the privilege, to hold the event.

Howdoin is to meet the University of Vermont and Bates College in two cross country meets this Fall as a return for the meets they had last year.

Athletes in New York will be kept busy during the next few months, while in New England there are only two meets. One is at Pawtucket and the other is the N. E. A. A. U. cross-country championships. Beginning with the Irish-American Athletic Club games next Saturday, there will follow in quick succession a number of athletic carnivals in New York, which will continue for some time. Following the Fall games of the Irish-American Athletic Club will be held the national ten-mile running and seven-mile walking championships, which are listed to take place at Celtic Park on October 26. The Junior Metropolitan cross-country championships will be held on November 2 at Van Cortlandt Park. During the following week come the senior championships of the Metropolitan Association of the Amateur Athletic Union, which will take place over the same course. In the evening the indoor season will be opened when the St. Agnes Athletic Club will hold its athletic competition in the Fourteenth Regiment Armory in Brooklyn.

On November 16 come the athletic carnival of the Twenty-third Regiment and the junior cross-country championship and the athletic games of the Brooklyn post-office clerks will be held. Two monster track meets are scheduled for Thanksgiving evening—the Twenty-second Regiment games in Manhattan and the Thirteenth Artillery athletic meet in Brooklyn. During the afternoon of Thanksgiving Day will be held the annual Yonkers Marathon, which will be run off over the roads near Hill City on the Hudson.

Johnson, Jeannette, Mc Vey and Langford Rule Heavies

No Chance for White Hope With "Big 4"

By JACK CONWAY.

EVER since Jim Jeffries was defeated by Jack Johnson at Reno, Nev., on July 4, 1910, there has been a world wide search for a white heavyweight strong, big and clever enough to lower the colors of the Galveston block. This search has been unsuccessful. In fact, no white boxer has been found who can defeat Langford, Jeanette or McVey.

This leaves the colored race in complete control of the heavyweight class. If Johnson should permanently retire from the ring tomorrow or should he die, the title would still be held by a negro.

In the other boxing divisions, the white mitt wielders reign supreme. There isn't a colored bantamweight, featherweight, lightweight, welterweight or middleweight worthy of mention. Joe Gans, the old master of the ring, was the last negro boxer of note outside of the heavyweight division.

There are many lovers of the manly art who believe that a negro will hold the heavyweight crown for years to come. Personally, however, I believe that they are mistaken.

JUST now the colored fighters are having fitings pretty near all their own way. Johnson, Langford Jeanette and McVey are master of the white heavyweights. Johnson has wisely refused to meet either Langford or Jeanette. Either of these men might be able to defeat him.

There has not been any new negro heavyweights developed during the past six years. The result will be that inside of three or four years, and possibly sooner, the present crop of colored boxers will be forced to succumb before Father Time. And there will be nobody to fill their places.

The white heavyweights will then come in for their own. The alleged ages of the "Big Four" are as follows:

Johnson, 34 years.
Jeanette, 31 years.
McVey, 27 years.
Langford, 26 years.

THERE are many experts who assert that Johnson's real age is thirty-six or thirty-eight, while some record books have Langford down as being thirty-two years of age. Joe Woodman, his manager, says that Sam is only twenty-six years of age. He it as it may, Samuel has been pasturing with the squared circle for over a decade, and, although he has won almost all of his battles, he has nevertheless taken some hard knocks. And history proves that punishment has never lengthened the career of any ring gladiator.

At the most, Johnson cannot hope to retain his title for over two years. He is no physically able to train for a hard battle. He has admitted himself that he suffered a great deal while preparing for his go with Jeffries, and that he was on the verge of both a mental and a physical breakdown after the contest.

JOE Jeanette is a good, old war horse, but is now well on in years. Sam Langford is Joe's master in bouts up to fifteen rounds, but it is an open question whether or not the Cambridge terror could win from Jeanette in a long battle. Joseph has demonstrated several times that he is a wonder in finish fights. You can knock him down twenty or thirty times in the first ten or fifteen rounds of a bout, but he is dealing just as strong in the twenty-fifth round as he was when the bell sounded at the opening of the first stanza.

Very few athletes attain prominence in any line of athletics after they have passed the one score and six mark. This is true of track and field men, baseball players, gridiron warlors, boxers and other athletes.

THE average athlete is usually at his best between the ages of twenty-one and twenty-six. He then holds his own for a year or two and then starts down the toboggan. Jess now Langford and McVey are holding their own. Neither of these men has improved during the past three years.

They will soon begin to go back as will Johnson and Jeanette. The latter are exceptions to the rule but they cannot hope to stand the gaff much longer. And, as I stated before, no colored heavyweights are being developed.

The white heavyweights, on the other hand, are very active. They realize that a cool million dollars is in store for the white boxer who can become champion of the heavyweight division. Every hamlet in the land boasts of a "white hope." Some day, and it may not be very long, one of these young huskies is going to come to the front and sweep all before him. Means, Johnson, Langford & Co. had then better seek cover.

Camp Gives Boys Warning on Sport

Walter Camp of Yale, one of the best athletic critics in the world, who since his college days has always endeavored to impress upon his proteges that they should beware of taking money while participating in amateur athletics, has written a sound article for boys in regard to their honesty in sport which in part follows:

"If you are enough of a man to be a good athlete, and someone asks you to sell that athletic ability upon their behalf, don't take money for it, or anything that amounts to pay. If you are on the school team or nine and go into training, don't break faith with your captain, yourself and your fellows by surreptitious indulgences. This doesn't mean that if you see some other fellow smoke on the sly you are obliged to tell of it, nor does it mean that you must call him to account, unless you are the captain. If his standard is not so high as yours that is his misfortune. If he asks your opinion, give it to him if you like, but not in such a way as to leave the impression that you are put out by your own longing for a similar indulgence. If you are the captain and you find a man breaking training in spite of your orders, and you consider it advisable to put him off, don't be afraid to do it. Gentlemen are not cowards, mentally or physically."

BRUSH REPORTED NOW OUT OF DANGER

NEW YORK, Oct. 21.—John T. Brush, owner of the New York National League Baseball Club, who several times has been reported dying, was today announced to be out of danger. At the Hotel Imperial it was said that Mr. Brush had so far recovered that he had been out for a drive both Saturday and Sunday and had ordered his car out for another trip this afternoon.

SHY AT DESERT RACE.

Not only is there a falling off in interest in automobile sports events in the East and Middle West, but the same condition exists in the Far West. The promoters of the annual desert race from Los Angeles to Phoenix are also experiencing difficulty in securing entries for their event, which a week ago but six cars had been named for the race which heretofore has attracted considerable attention in that section of the country.

Sullivan to Quit Athletic Ranks

James P. Sullivan, who won the mile championship of America in 1907, will retire from the amateur athletic ranks on November 1 to take a position as trainer and athletic adviser of the Fourteenth Regiment A. A. Sullivan is at present a member of the Irish American A. C. and also is captain of the Thirteenth Regiment A. A. track team.

In addition to many sectional championships, won as a member of the Irish American A. C., Sullivan scored heavily for his regiment in the military league championships, and was a member of the Olympic teams that went to Athens as a member of the St. Bartholomew A. C., but later joined the Irish Americans, and I was while wearing the colors of that organization that he ran a mile in 4 minutes 22 seconds at Travers Island. At the time of that performance it was the fastest mile ever run by a native born American.

CUPID CHILDS DYING; HE LOSES HIS HOME

BALTIMORE, Oct. 21.—Because Clarence T. Childs, known familiarly to baseball fans several years ago as Cupid, was unable to keep up payments on the house he was trying to buy on West Pratt street, where he has been lying at the point of death for weeks, the house has been sold over his head. The price paid at the auction was $1,225 and Childs' indebtedness was $1,631.53.

Sports Do Not Pay at Columbia College

Only three of the fifteen sports indulged in by Columbia students the past year show a balance on the right hand of the ledger, according to the financial report for the past year. The varsity basket-ball team, the freshman basket-ball team and the varsity rifle teams were the only organizations that came out on the credit side, showing a surplus of $707.54. The crew ran up a deficit of more than $5,000, while the track team went into the hole to the extent of $1,520. Swimming and water polo cost $536, and soccer $222. The hockey team, which played a championship game all through the season, lost $495, and it cost $476 to bring the fencing team out all square. The total deficit of the teams made up by the association is $8,983.46.

School Sports.

Captain Pendlebury of the Waltham High School team is playing a great game of football this year at quarterback. He was led his team to several well earned victories.

Hyde Park High School is represented by two football teams. The game of soccer was introduced in that school as in several other schools in Greater Boston. The faculty appealed to the school committee and a regular rugby football team was sanctioned at the school. Their annual game is with Dedham High School.

James Burke, formerly of the Powder Point school, has entered Lehigh University and expects to represent some club in New York during the Winter season. He holds the interscholastic record in the 1,000 yards.

Dorchester High has been rather unlucky this Fall in its schedule, as they have had several games cancelled on them. The team representing the school, is quite strong this year and will show up well in its big game.

Bill Broderick, who formerly coached Hingle is having great success with Haverhill this year. The team has defeated Newburyport, Nashua, Beverly and Quincy.

The system tried out at Andover this year, where they had interclass football games, proved to be a success. The best men were taken from each team for the first team. It is understood that several finds were uncovered.

EXETER SHAPES FOR FRESHMEN

EXETER, N. H., Oct. 21.—Coach Ziegler will this afternoon begin whipping the Exeter eleven into shape for the game with the Harvard freshmen on Saturday.

There are several weaknesses in the line, shown up by the game with the Yale freshmen, that will have to be strengthened before any hope of a victory over the Crimson youngsters can be entertained. The most glaring weakness is in the centre of the line. This will be in a measure overcome with the return of Hurd, the Exeter right guard.

Next to a victory over Andover, Exeter is most anxious to secure a win over the Crimson freshmen, because of the presence on that eleven of Mahan, last year's Andover captain, and the man who was a big factor in the defeat of Exeter last Fall at the hands of Andover.

The first chance for a comparison of the relative strength of Andover and Exeter was the games played by these two rivals with the Dartmouth freshmen, which indicate that at this stage Andover is considerably in advance of Exeter in development. The Dartmouth freshmen two weeks ago defeated Exeter 12 to 6, while Andover held the Green youngsters Saturday to a 0 to 0 score.

ATTELL-WALSH BOUT OFF UNTIL THURSDAY

The bout between Abe Attell and Jimmy Walsh which was scheduled to take place at the Pilgrim A. A. tomorrow night has been put over till Thursday evening. Attell asked Matchmaker McLean to give him two days more in which to get into condition for the go. The former featherweight champion realizes that he will have to be at his best in order to hold his own with Walsh. Jimmy is getting into condition at Matty Baldwin big farm at Lynnfield.

THE BOSTON AMERICAN'S DAILY DOUBLE

The Eyes of Love

By BEATRICE FAIFAX.

"We say love is blind, and the figure of Cupid is drawn with a bandage around his eyes. Blind—yes, because he does not see what he does not like; but the sharpest-sighted hunter in the universe is Love for finding what he seeks, and only that."—Ralph Waldo Emerson.

And he seeks perfection. And away back in the beginning of things Some One said, "That which ye seek ye will find."

This little characteristic of Cupid would make life pleasanter if adopted by others than the lover.

If girls would seek perfection in their friends; if they would look for virtues instead of faults; if they would believe in the best in every one, instead of expecting the worst!

If it became a universal habit to say of a friend:

"He is too honorable to do that," instead of saying, "He is none too good," what a difference it would make in the person of whom it is said!

A great many years ago, when Sunday clothes were really Sunday clothes, and sacred for that day, it was found that the world behaved better when it had its Sunday garments on.

I claim that when we give our friends to understand that our opinions of them are exalted, it clothes their souls in Sunday garments. "I know that you are always honorable," if said to a friend in conviction and sincerity, will make that friend honorable.

"I had believed you were too good to do that!" has saved many a person from a repetition of a sin.

"It was just what I expected you to do" has led many a sinner to repent his crime.

This little desire in the eye that makes one find perfection in a lover is not beyond cultivation by those to whom a lover is yet to come. Neither is it beyond the power of those to whom Love is a story of yesterday.

Every one has a friend. The little habit of looking for perfection in that friend is of greater mutual benefit than anything in the universe.

The friend becomes an ideal and tries to live up to it. The one who thinks the best of that friend gets into the habit of thinking well of others, and grows in moral strength accordingly.

This little habit Cupid teaches of seeking perfection is the foundation of perfect love. It is the superstructure of perfect happiness.

It is when disappointment and irritation creep in and one begins to look for faults that faults become apparent, and happiness ceases.

"That which ye seek, ye will find." Seek for good nature instead of ill temper; seek for sunshine instead of gloom.

Seek for the good qualities even when the bad are most glaring. Seek, knowing that they exist, and you will find they do exist, and need just the encouragement to develop them that your faith will give.

"The sharpest-sighted hunter in the universe is Love for finding what he seeks, and only that."

And a fuller interpretation of that word "love" means the sentiment you have for your friends, your associates, your casual acquaintances, and all your kindred.

For His Family's Sake

PATERFAMILIAS was a very robust man, but he called on the doctor if the truth be told, Paterfamilias had grown into the habit of bullying his family.

"I don't know what is the matter with my family," he remarked to the medico, "but my wife is nervous, my children are suffering from something—I don't know what. In fact, the whole household is upset. All the servants are bordering on nervous prostration. What do you think about it?"

The doctor was a friend of the family and knew a little of its history.

"I think it would be all right," he said, "if you took a six months' tour of Europe—alone."

"Me?" replied the father ungrammatically, on his surprise. "Me?"

"Yes," replied the doctor. "For the health of your family."

Hunting a Husband

No. 41—The Widow's Gloomy Day in the Country Is Brightened by Some Pleasant Anticipation

By Virginia Terhune Van de Water

DAY dawned dull and gray on the morning following the Minor's arrival at Pleasanton. Beatrice, awaking late, heard the drip, drip of rain from the eaves over the window, and turned upon her pillow with a sigh of disgust. The sentence, "As gloomy as a day in the country," came to her mind. She wondered who had ever said it to her. Then she remembered that Robert Maynard had once used the expression, and that she had laughed at the quiteness of it. What could be more dreary than such a day as this, her first in this Summer resort? She pondered upon Dr. Haynes' sudden appearance last night, trying to decide whether his manner had been the result of professional interest or mere pity for a lonely woman. Somehow, this morning, the whole affair seemed flat, stale and unprofitable.

The sound of Mary in the kitchen at the other end of the bungalow was carried to her ears. In the small building, finished in wood throughout, with no plaster to muffle the sounds, a step on any of the floors could be heard in every room. From Mary's vigorous handling of the pots and pans this morning one would infer that she was as gloomy as the day. The acrid odor of kerosene smoke startled the mistress of the house, and as soon as she was dressed she hastened to the kitchen.

"Don't I smell kerosene, Mary?" she queried suspiciously.

The maid's flushed face attested to the fact that she had been having her own troubles with the range.

"Sure, ma'am, it's years since I've made a coal fire, and I've had a fierce time of it this morning. So I just put a little kerosene on to hurry things along a bit. There wasn't fire in the stove when I poured in the tin."

Beatrice looked grave. "It's a risky thing to do," she warned. "You know, I suppose, that if it could be proved that you used kerosene in your range no insurance could be collected if the house burned down?"

"An' what's the differeuce, seein' the house don't belong to you?" remarked Mary, with the inconsequence of her kind.

Children Happy

Beatrice did not wish to continue the argument and arouse her maid's combative spirit, so after a gentle request that she be very careful, she returned to the children's room to assist them in their dressing. Both Jack and Jean were in ecstacy at finding themselves in the country and their spirits were not dampened by the information that they could not go off the verands until the rain ceased.

The downfall lasted all day, however, and for a while domestic matters indoors seemed as unpromising as the weather outside, for, soon after breakfast, Mary sought out her mistress with an account of her range troubles. She found that unless she had a very hot fire in the kitchen she would get no hot water with which to wash her dishes. But this same big fire, she claimed, would make the small kitchen unbearably hot.

"If we only had some way of heating water in a pot on top of the range without havin' a fire in the range itself!" she wailed.

After the maid had returned to the kitchen Beatrice, moved by the necessity for advice, telephoned to Helen Robbins and proceeded to pour forth her tale of woe. Helen, always practical and quick-witted, suggested that Beatrice and Mary bring up from the cellar an oil stove which the former inmates of the bungalow had always used during the Summers.

"Mary can heat water for the dishes on that without the discomfort and work of a coal fire," she explained. "But, of course, you will not have hot water in the boiler for your baths."

"Oh, never mind about that," replied Beatrice. "After all," she added, sarcastically, "what is the comfort of an entire family compared with the convenience of one maid?"

Helen laughed sympathetically. "Well, dear," she said, "you know we all have to put up with that kind of thing out here. I am sorry that your first day should be so damp and dismal. What are you going to do this afternoon?"

"Nothing," replied Beatrice, "except sit around and get the blues."

"Nonsense!" ejaculated her friend. "Make up your mind to come over here about 3 o'clock and stay to dinner. Uncle Henry was coming out, but he never comes if it rains, for"—with a giggle—"the dampness gives him rheumatism in his poor old bones. I would not ask you if he was to be here, for he would bore you to death. But he told me not to expect him on any day that was not clear and bright. So as it is damp and raw, we'll have a good, quiet time together. And perhaps I'll telephone down to the Cedar Cliff for Paul Maynard and his brother to come up and call this evening."

"His brother!" exclaimed Beatrice, incredulously.

"Why, yes—Robert, you know. His fiancee has gone to the White Mountains with her father and mother, so Robert comes out often to see his brother, Paul, to relieve the monotony of her absence, I suppose. He says little about her, even to me, and he is just as good to talk to, you know, even if he is engaged." She laughed again. She was evidently in a good humor.

Wealthy and a Bachelor

"Of course he is," responded Beatrice heartily. For the moment she was thinking less of Robert Maynard than of his brother, Paul, of whom Helen had said yesterday that he was wealthy, and a bachelor.

"Come about 5 o'clock," repeated her friend. "Let Jack come over here and play with Dan today, won't you? Put his rubber boots on and send him right along. I'll send Tom over with the covered carriage for you late this afternoon, and recurn the small boy at the same time. Do not bother to dress for dinner, for there will be only ourselves here for that meal. And the men who may come over this evening will not expect to see city togs in this unfashionable place."

"All right and thank you!" responded Beatrice. "Do not send for me too early, for I would like to see my little girl safely through her supper before I leave her. She is ever so much better today, so I do not think that even Dr. Haynes could object to my leaving her this evening."

"Of course he couldn't!" agreed Helen. "To tell the truth, I thought he was overcareful about the child last night. I wish you could have been with us, yet we had no other company, after all, than Dr. Haynes. He wanted to telephone you just before he started for home and ask about Jen, but I would not let him wake you."

"Thank you!" said Beatrice meekly. She did not think it worth while to tell her friend of the physician's unconventionality late call.

While Helen still talked, Beatrice decided that this evening she would wear an elaborately simple net and lace frock over a pale blue slip. Her blue brought out the color in her eyes and made her look young. And since she had gone to the expense of getting pretty clothes for this Summer, why not wear them when she had the chance to do so?

Then she listened once more to Helen's remarks. They had been upon the weather, and of no especial interest. But her final speech brought the widow to attention.

"There is no loss without some small gain, Mrs. Robbins was saying. "And I am grateful to this persistant rain for preventing Uncle Henry's weekly visit to Pleasanton to-day."

"So am I! agreed Beatrice. And in her heart she knew that she spoke the truth.

Sick of It

"The hour of twelve has struck," hissed the ghost.

"I don't blame it," replied the materialist. "It was worked to death long ago."

NOT SALTS AND PILLS, 'CASCARETS'

If Constipated, Bilious, Headachy, Stomach Sour, get a 10-cent box of Cascarets.

You men and women who can't get feeling right, who have headache, coated tongue, foul taste and foul breath, dizziness, can't sleep, are bilious, nervous and upset, bothered with a sick, gassy, disordered stomach, or have backache and feel worn out.

Are you keeping your bowels clean with Cascarets, or merely forcing a passageway every few days with salts, cathartic pills or castor oil? This is important.

Cascarets work while you sleep; cleanse and regulate the stomach, remove the sour, undigested and fermenting food and foul gases; take the excess bile from the liver and carry out of the system all the constipated waste matter and poison in the intestines and bowels.

A Cascaret tonight will straighten you out by morning—a 10-cent box from any drug store will keep your stomach sweet, liver and bowels regular and head clear for months. Don't forget the children. They love Cascarets because they taste good—do good—never gripe or sicken.

Little Bobbie's Pa

By WILLIAM F. KIRK

PA had a awful grouch last night. I dcent know what a grouch is, but that's what I heard Ma say to him. Pa had bet sum munny on Tuesday's gaim of the World's Seeries between the Giants & the Red Socks, & he cant fergit it, altho it is sum days ago since he lost the munny. I gess it isent beekuss Pa lost the munny so much as it is beekuss Mr frend Mr. Stahl lost the gaim. What made it worse for poor Pa was that Ma has cumpany here for a few weeks, her sister & her sister's husband, both from New York. Pa likes Ma's sister vite away, beekuss she is like Ma, but I cud tel that he didcnt cair snuff for his brother in Law to walk it worth while speeking or riteing about. I guess if Pa's brother in Law, Mister Sharpe, was to fal into the Charles River, Pa wuddent jump in to save him, & Pa is a better swimmer than enybody at Revere Beach.

Mister Sharpe was too nice, anyway. He was al the time smiling & saying I guess you are right, or "my deer frend," or "I quite agree with you," & al the time he was grinning. I like to see peeopel smile, but wen they smile al the time, the way Mister Sharpe does, that is kind of different. Pa was telling me one time that it is a good idee to smile, but a bad idee to trust a man that never does nothing else but smile. That kind of man, Pa sed, the kind that is always smirk-ing, does it for either one or two reesons:

Reeson 1: They have fine teeth that they love to show.

Reeson 2: They want to sel you sumthing.

Pa began for to look kind of hard at Mister Sharpe after Mister Sharpe had grinned & smiled & smirked for a litel while. Pa didn't feel that way any-how. He was scowling all the time. He was about as smiley in the face as Mister Fagin on his last nite in jail.

I think everybody likes us men of superior intelleck ought to scatter a litel sunshine along the pathway of life, said Mister Sharpe. Dosn't you? he asked Pa.

You can scatter all the sunshine you want to, sed Pa. I haven't got any superior intelleck. I bet a lot of munny on the Red Sox in the Tuesday's world's series gaim, sed Pa, & if I have any superior intelleck it must be the kind that maiks a man go to college fifteen years & then flunk his exsamynashuns, sed Pa. Let us talk about the lowering clouds that sweep above the bleek moors of sum stern North country, Pa sed. If I knew where there was a bleek moor now, sed Pa, I wod like to go there & bild a litel hoam, just for me & myself. I dcont ask anybody else to share my greef with me, Pa sed.

But one should nevver be a hermit, sed Mister Sharpe. How can one smile & laf wen one is all alone? Laff & the world laffs with you, sed Mister Sharpe. Then he smiled sum mear. Then he smirk-ed & grinned.

& all the time he was there Pa had his teeth so tite together that the enamel got fine, like Ma's face powder.

THE girl clasped his hand in both of hers. "Oh, Stephen, you don't know how important it is for you to be at the table tonight, even if only for a moment!"

"I know!" exclaimed Steve, miserably, "but—please excuse me!"

The girl regarded him gravely for a moment and then:

"Steve," she offered, "if you'll come down I'll tell you what we'll do. We'll let the others go home in father's and Sam's car and I'll let you get a taxi and we'll drive all the way home together."

Steve's fingers closed on that accursed quarter and he groaned aloud.

"I can't do that, either," he said. The girl dropped his hand.

"Stephen, what has happened to you?" she asked, earnestly. "You don't realize how these little things count. I don't care for myself, but mother and father look upon things differently than we do. They think that this is neglect. I understand. I know you are doing all you can, but staying away from the table tonight gives mother a chance to criticise you. 'Where is Stephen? What progress is he making? What are his prospects?' I know it sounds hard and cruel!" she exclaimed contritely as she saw the look in his eyes. "But I know she means right!"

The Ring

"I don't blame her," said Steve, quietly. "She IS right!"

"Then, will you join us?" asked Grace, eagerly.

"No, Grace, I can't do that." He turned away that he might not see the hurt in the girl's face. There was a little pause.

"All right, Stephen," she said at last, in a new voice. "I don't want you to think I'm doing this for any other reason than to bring you to a realisation of our position. It is the end of the old year. I'm going to work with you—I'm going to discourage you to work for me. But we are going to begin the New Year back where we were six months ago. I want you to take his ring." She held it out and Steve took it mechanically. He stared down at the gleaming solitaire and thought dully that a few minutes ago he was wishing he had something to pawn. The next instant it was gone and the girl was holding both his hands in hers.

"Now cry," she cried, with a little catch in her voice. "I can't hurt you like that!"

"No," repeated Steve in an impersonal sort of way. "Please keep it."

"I will!"

Grace's explanations down stairs were more or less accepted—less by Mrs. Tyler—and Stephen was left upstairs. But not alone. Jackson Ives was comfortably ensconced in the chair recently vacated by Mr. Morgan.

Mr. Jackson Ives was a peculiar looking man. He was also a peculiar man, as you will discover. His face was a pasty, nondescript color, perfectly smooth shaven, and he had apparently never had a hair on his face. The eyes were heavy-lidded and were directed at you with an unblinking directness that was annoying to nervous people. Judged by common standards it was a "strong" face. It was certainly inscrutable. It was impossible to imagine that it had ever expressed anything but ennui. No one knew much about him excepting that he talked little, but very well, always had plenty of money, the manner of "one born" and an impenetrable past.

"You disappointed me today, my boy," he said with more kindliness than you would have thought him capable of. "I missed you. I saw Mr. Morgan downstairs. Was he up here?"

"Yes," said Steve, shortly.

"Business?"

"Yes—for him," said Stephen, grimly.

"Um!" remarked Mr. Jackson Ives. "You're not joining the festivities tonight?"

"No."

"Do you know," said Mr. Ives pleasantly, "somehow I thought you would not and I thought you'd come in late, and be here alone; so I dropped over. Maybe we can watch the New Year come in together—it may bring us something."

"I've got mine," said Steve, glumly. "But I'm glad you called. Won't you take something?"

"No, thanks—but don't let that stop you."

"No, I'm through with it."

Steve leaned back and gazed at the ceiling. Mr. Ives leaned forward and gazed at Steve from under his drooping heavy lids and thick sandy eyebrows.

"Do you know," he said at last, "that you are a very remarkable young man? You have every element of success."

Steve's eyes came down from the ceiling to Mr. Ives's face and then went back to the ceiling.

"Have I?" he inquired sweetly.

"Yes, indeed," said Mr. Ives, seriously. "You're a good mixer—you belong to all the clubs—you have a manner."

"That won't get me anything," said Steve.

"It will get you everything," corrected Mr. Ives with a little energy. "You're going to be a millionaire one of these days. A Vanderbilt! You're a young man who could use money. Have you ever thought what you would do if you had Rockefeller's income?"

"No," said Steve, "but I've often thought what he would do if he had mine!"

"You should have his!" declared Mr. Ives.

"Do you know any way to make him give it to me?" inquired the prospective millionaire. Mr. Ives shook his head quickly.

"No, no! You must make it."

"All right," said Steve, with ironic cheer. "I'll do that!"

Steve's Confession.

"Business good?" inquired Mr. Ives.

"No."

"I'm surprised and sorry to hear that," said the visitor, soberly. "I'll tell you what you ought to do if business is quiet: Take an opportunity to get away on a little vacation. It will do you a world of good. Run down to Florida for two weeks."

"Run down to Florida IN two weeks," retorted Steve.

"I'll go along with you," Mr. Ives offered, with the utmost friendliness. "It's not an expensive trip. Six or seven hundred dollars will get you out."

"If I had six or seven hundred dollars," said Steve, "I would go out right now."

Mr. Ives was amused. "What do you mean?"

Steve unclasped his legs, leaned forward and the whimsical, cynical expression disappeared. He looked into Mr. Ives's face with as keen a glance as the one that met his.

"You're a sharp, shrewd man, Mr. Ives," he said crisply. "I've never seen anything get by you yet. What are you trying to get at? You know I haven't six or seven hundred dollars. I haven't any elements of success. I'm a terrible failure. If it wasn't such a low-down trick to play on your friends—I'd end everything! Now you know the truth."

Mr. Ives took a long, slow breath. His cheery, friendly attitude vanished. The corners of his mouth twitched ever so faintly and there was a brusque, business-like note in his voice when he spoke.

"I've been waiting for three weeks for you to tell me that," he said, quietly. "How much has Morgan to do with this?"

"I don't blame him," replied Steve, in the same tone. He instantly fell in with the new Mr. Ives, although the change was a big surprise.

How He Got It

"How long have you had this mine of yours?" The question was asked in a tone that implied there was no doubt that it would be promptly answered.

"Six months," replied Steve. He felt a strange sense of helplessness coming to him from the man across the table.

"Tell me just how you got it," commanded Mr. Ives curtly.

"I was out in Arizona prospecting."

"Yes—go on."

"I found this mine—Sky Rocket—partially developed, enough machinery to work it in a small way."

"I understand," nodded Mr. Ives.

"For a thousand dollars I got a thirty-day option," continued Steve, as if he was discussing the transaction with a backer. "The price was thirty thousand cash. I had ten thousand and was sure of getting the other twenty—but the parties failed to come through with it. Just before my option expired Morgan came out there and bought up a lot of acreage, including mines and prospects. That caused a rush into that section and prices jumped. If I forfeited my option the owners could have asked a hundred thousand for what I was getting for thirty. Morgan knew it and wanted it; so I guess he just about figured that he would lend me twenty thousand on my note, let me pay in my ten thousand and then, at the end of six months, grab it for himself for the twenty thousand."

"Did Morgan do that to you?" asked Mr. Ives slowly.

"Yes. Oh, that's business," added Steve quickly. "I was glad enough to accept his terms at the time. I left a gang of mine—Mike Reardon—out there to work the mine, and I came East to sell the stocks.

"Well, I couldn't sell any stock because Reardon didn't strike any gold, and Reardon couldn't strike any gold because I didn't sell enough stock to buy better machinery. We discouraged each other. So," he concluded coolly, "we're done, you see, exactly what Mr. Morgan counted on us doing."

"Is he going to foreclose?" asked Mr. Ives.

"He doesn't have to," replied Steve. "The deed is held in escrow. The note calls for twenty thousand or the mine on January 2. So I'll have to give up my friends and my clubs. All I have left is—manner!" the young man concluded with gentle irony.

Mr. Ives drummed on the table with his fingers. Steve leaned back and resumed his study of the ceiling.

"Have you any telegraph blanks here?" inquired the visitor suddenly. Baird opened a drawer, took out a pad and shoved it across the table.

"What is Reardon's first name?" went on Mr. Ives, quietly adjusting a fountain pen. Steve turned his head to stare at him curiously.

A Helping Hand

"Mike," he answered. Mr. Ives wrote. "Where is he?" he inquired, looking up.

Steve grinned. "The Mansion House, Gallup, Arizona—that's the worst hotel I ever was in," he added, as Mr. Ives resumed his writing.

"Bad as that, eh?" murmured that gentleman absently as he finished the telegram. He read it over to himself, then he read it up and read it aloud:

"Mike Reardon, Mansion House, Gallup, Arizona.

"Paid Morgan his note. I own the mine. Double effort to strike gold in two days to cover big sale of stock. "STPHEN BAIRD."

To Be Continued Tomorrow.

Tuberculosis Remedy Based on Medicine

To say that a specific exists for the cure of Consumption is perhaps too strong a statement, but in Eckman's Alterative we have a medicine that has been the means of saving many a life to years of usefulness, and of permanently benefiting a large number of Consumptives.

Certainly a person afflicted with a wasting disease should be well fed with wholesome, nourishing food, but frequently raw eggs in quantities cause a digestive breakdown, and then no food nourishes. As for milk, a very good food for many, but a producer of biliousness for some.

Any diet that keeps a Consumptive well nourished is the right one, but what is going to improve the patient? Eckman's Alterative has brought about full recovery in many cases of Consumption. Let those speak who know. Here is one:

90 Savidah St., Rochester, N. Y.

"Gentlemen: On June 3, 1907, I was operated upon for Tubercular peritonitis at St. Mary's Hospital, Rochester, N. Y. After the operation my physician gave me up as hopeless. I was then urged by a priest to take Eckman's Alterative, which I did. My weight at the time was 73 lbs. I began to improve and steadily gained in health and strength. I now weigh 125 pounds, and am absolutely well. Believing I owe it to myself and others, I make the statement."

(Sworn Affidavit) EDNA FINZER.

Eckman's Alterative is effective in Bronchitis, Asthma, Hay Fever, Throat and Lung Troubles, and in upbuilding the system. Does not contain poisons, opiates or habit-forming drugs. For sale by all Rikers-Jaynes stores, Houghton & Dutton Drug Dept., and other leading druggists. Ask for booklet telling of recoveries, and write to Eckman Laboratory, Philadelphia, Pa., for additional evidence.

Stock Prices; Financial News

Boston and New York Prices Are Down at the Opening of the Week's Trading.

STATE STREET, Oct. 21.—Bulls and bears alike had a decidedly feeble appearance when they arrived on the stock exchanges at the opening of the week. They seemed not to have recovered from the strenuous hours they saw before the Saturday close.

Landon, as pace maker, was off by fractions, and Wall Street and the Boston market followed along with declines from the Saturday quotations.

Prices here at the end of the first hour included: Adventure 7¼, up ½; Shoe 55½, off ⅝; North Butte 37¾, off ⅜; Shannon 15, unchanged; East Butte 16⅝ off ⅛; Canadian Pacific 267, off ⅛.

BOSTON FINANCIAL NEWS BRIEFS

During 1912 twenty-eight increases in dividends of copper mining companies have been made. Thirteen companies participated in raising their dividend rates. Three companies paid their initial disbursements and two mine have resumed dividends. Of the increases a company has increased its rate one times, to company has increased its rate four times. This is convincing evidence of the great underlying strength of the copper shares.

The Central Leather Company is having a creased year in its history. Tomorrow the directors will consider the question of declaring a quarterly dividend on the preferred stock at the rate of $6 per share on its common stock. The Everett mills of Lawrence have declared a dividend of $3 a share, payable Nov. 1 to stock of record Oct. 22.

London Securities Market Showed No Life and Prices Were Off for American Railway Shares.

The London opening prices showed: unchanged; Smelting 47⅜, off ⅛; Royals 34⅛, off 1⅛.

Amalgamated 90, off ½; East Butte 16⅝, off ⅛; Franklin 11⅝, off ⅛; Granby 65¾, up ¼; Old Colony 8⅝, off ⅛; Mayflower 12, off ½; North Butte 37⅝, off ⅛; Boston & Maine 90½, off ½; Fruit, 100½, unchanged.

In Wall Street.

There was a continuation of the selling movement in Wall street and prices were generally lower. Among the fallial declines were in Steel Common, Amalgamated, American Smelting, Atchison, Reading, Union Pacific and Canadian Pacific. Southern Railway, Pennsylvania and Baltimore & Ohio were unchanged. There was considerable selling for foreign accounts.

The Curb was heavy. Americans in London were narrow.

The London Market.

The London securities market had no life. Price movements showed an irregular, drooping disposition. The Balkan situation did not appear to exert any special influence. Gilt-edged investments, though below the best figures, retained firmness, but home rails ruled heavy.

American railway shares moved unceremoniously within a narrow range. After an advance Canadian Pacific became reactionary.

Weakness of tone in coppers and mines was set down to Paris influences.

THE RAILWAY SITUATION

There is increasing evidence that railroads are to fight more vigorously for higher rates, and Bethlehem are not lacking that the Interstate Commerce Commission is resisting in its attitude toward the railroads. However, contrary to general opinion, railroads in the country as a whole are not suffering from the business depression. Earnings in good earning, but are actually showing a larger proportionate increase in net.

NORTH BUTTE.

The report of the general manager of North Butte for the month of September, 1912, is notable for the following:

Ore mined, 190,—On the 2,300 level ore was struck and the drift extended. This has been extended a total distance of 1,000 feet, and has shown ore that contains 47½ feet of ore, which averages 40 per cent. copper and four ounces in silver and gold. The ore in this drift has been sampled, and upon the whole the amount of ore disclosed by this work has been satisfactory.

B. & O. RAILROAD MERGER.

PARKERSBURG, W. Va., Oct. 21.—Five West Virginia railroads will be merged with the Baltimore & Ohio as a result of a decision reached at a special meeting of the stockholders. The roads are the Ohio River, Parkersburg Branch, Hunting-ton & Big Sandy, Ravenswood, Spencer & Glenville Railroad, and the Ripley & Mill Creek.

POLITICAL NEWS

Vote for Wilson, Foss, Walsh and Other Democratic Candidates

Edward A. Filene of Boston, in an open letter to the merchants and business men of the country, advocates the election of Governor Wilson.

His letter says:

To the Merchants and Business Men of the United States:

Mr. Wanamaker's appeal to you on October 4, calling for a continent wide rally to the support of Mr. Taft on the part of the merchants and business men of the country, has no doubt received your serious attention.

Any expression of opinion from Mr. Wanamaker in a matter of such importance as the present campaign would command and receive the thoughtful and serious consideration of the business men of the nation. And for just that reason it has seemed to me that those of us in business who believe Mr. Wanamaker's position is mistaken should make known our positions and the reasons for our firm belief that the business of the country will be best served by the election of Governor Wilson to the Presidency.

There is every reason to believe that we are on the eve of abundant prosperity. If natural conditions prevail and if things now unlooked for do not occur to prevent it, we shall see in this country within a year the beginning of an era of unprecedented business activity.

Sees Stability With Mr. Wilson.

Is my opinion one thing likely to prevent the setting in of such a period of prosperity would be the re-election of President Taft, and the one thing that would make prosperity most certain would be the election of Governor Wilson.

This opinion is based upon my belief that for the business world nothing else is so important as stability. Business men nowadays can meet any conditions if those conditions are fairly stable.

What I want to emphasize is this proposition—and it is one with which most business men will agree—namely, that it is not so much particular conditions as it is stability of conditions that makes for widespread investment of capital and employment of labor and the resultant prosperity.

The present administration has been one of very little accomplishment along the lines where legislation is most desired by the people, and the re-election of President Taft would only mean an renewal, probably a more persistent and determined renewal, of the agitation which has marked the last four years.

Calls Tariff Chief Issue.

Of the reform which the people are demanding, perhaps the most important

Of the reforms which the people are readily increased during the past four years and there is no good reason to believe that the demand for tariff reform will cease to exist, or that the agitation which has disturbed the country for four years will subside until there is some real tariff reform.

Upon this question President Taft's record is most unsatisfactory. His re-election would not create any feeling of assurance that there would be a satisfactory solution of the tariff question.

By a satisfactory solution I mean a removal of unjust and unnecessary taxation. Those tariffs are unjust which operate so as to exclude certain classes of goods and enable the producers on this side to maintain monopoly and enjoy unjust prices.

Those tariffs are unnecessary which are placed on a class of goods of which we are world-wide producers and in which we can compete with the producers of the world.

A satisfactory solution of the tariff would go further than this removal of unjust and unnecessary taxation and would include the making of tariff bargains or reciprocal tariff agreements, with the other nations of the world. The tariff has been worked out of many of the world's markets. It should not continue to operate in that way.

Criticises Mr. Roosevelt's Record.

Upon this matter Mr. Roosevelt's record is not much better than that of Mr. Taft, nor is his present position on the tariff much more promising than that of the President.

I admire Mr. Roosevelt and am willing and anxious to give him credit for the great things which he has accomplished, but tariff reform can hardly be said to be among them. The Saratoga convention, which was under his absolute control, gave a sweeping indorsement to the Payne-Aldrich bill. He does not now offer any definite tariff program.

These things lead me to believe that we have no reason to expect a satisfactory solution of the tariff question from Mr. Roosevelt, and that his election now, like the re-election of Taft, would mean four years more of tariff agitation.

With Mr. Wilson elected, one may reasonable expect a satisfactory solution of the tariff question. His expressions on this matter show a full recognition of the country's demand for tariff reform, a thorough knowledge of the ways in which tariff laws are made, and a determination to secure as promptly as possible the much needed legislation.

At the same time, Governor Wilson has shown that he recognizes as a fact the intimate relation which tariff has been made to have to the structure of business in this country, and that he would keep this fact in mind in handling tariff legislation.

Monopoly and the Individual.

Mr. Roosevelt favors the recognition of monopolies as inevitable, and this is logical, as he favors a controlled continuation of the conditions under which they have developed.

Mr. Taft is against monopoly, but he is for a continuation of the laws which have brought them into being.

Governor Wilson, alone of the candidates, has taken a consistent position for the preservation of the individual in the business world, he alone of the candidates is pledged to legislation which will prevent such financial confederacies as now control the business and credit of the nation.

Therefore, being convinced that prosperity now awaits only staple conditions and a proper basis of credit, I am firmly of the opinion that we, as business men, should work and vote for Governor Wilson.

EDWARD A. FILENE.

Grant's Son is for Wilson.

NEW YORK, Oct. 21.—Jesse R. Grant, son of General Ulysses S. Grant, commander in chief of the Union Army in the Civil War and Republican President of the United States from 1869 to 1877, has declared for Wilson and Marshall. In an open letter he says:

As a son of the soldier who fought to uphold the principles for which Abraham Lincoln stood, and as a son of a Republican President, I can see only one duty for myself to give heartily my influence and my vote for principles and not the name of a party long since divorced from its sympathy for the common man.

Verily, I believe that the principles for which Woodrow Wilson is fighting are the principles for which my father fought, and that he alone among the Presidential candidates measures up to the standards of courage, conscience and capacity of the leader whose hand my father helped to uphold.

Old voters, as well as new, I beg of you not to be deceived by names and prejudices. Open your minds to the truth and vote in its light.

BIG AUDIENCE GREETS CALVE

By FREDERICK JOHNS.

Sunday afternoons are to be very important musically this year, for both Symphony Hall and the Opera House will offer attractive concerts for that hitherto blank period of the week.

Emma Calve opened the season before a very large audience which proves that the new concert hour will be popular at Symphony Hall.

Calve was assisted by Signor Galileo Gaspari and Emiliano Renaud, pianist. Signor Gasparri, besides carrying around that name and a tenor voice, is the husband of Madame Calve.

If tenors as husbands are not usually considered successful, so husbands as tenors very frequently fail to please. Signor Galileo Gasparri is a very successful husband, according to the testimony of Emma Calve, and a large assemblage expressed its approval of him as a tenor yesterday afternoon.

His voice, though thin and not of extraordinary fine quality, is agreeable; he has a good method and may pass for a very capable concert tenor.

Monsieur Renaud appeared both as soloist and accompanist. He is an exceptionally intelligent pianist and plays Liszt uncommonly well. As an accompanist he proved of great assistance to the singers, and did not forget to play expressively.

Calve's press agent has been circulating stories that she is about to retire, probably in hopes of drawing a farewell audience. It is quite certain that she will not retire while she sings as she did yesterday.

Her voice is still in its glory. Where is there another whose tone is so pure, so thrilling, so rich, so impressive, so mellow? Supposing it does show slight signs of wear in the upper register, it is still a wonderful organ and we are glad to get a chance to hear it.

The program ranged from opera arias to old French songs. Most interesting was Calve's exquisite performance of "In Questa Tomba Oscura," of Beethoven.

"Carmen" was represented by the Habanera and the second act duet.

The singers have been giving these numbers in costume with appropriate action. Yesterday being Sunday they donned gowns and frock coats, but retained the action with comical effect.

Speaking of gowns, Calve wore black lace. She had a huge flat hat tilted at a perilous angle from which depended a wide black veil. This strange costume combined with her natural bulk made her look wierd but impressive.

Clearance Sale of Pianos
That Have Been Rented For the Summer Months

While we have always made a specialty of renting pianos for the summer season, our rental business this year was nearly double that of any previous year.

With these pianos returning from the various summer homes, we find our warerooms cramped for space. We therefore offer which include nearly all the well-known makes at prices that cannot fail to interest the careful buyer.

NEARLY 50 PIANOS,

These pianos have been used from three to six months, and while they cannot be sold for new, their value as far as actual quality of tone, beauty of design and finish are concerned is practically 100 cents on the dollar.

We mention but a few of these wonderful values, which mean a GREAT SAVING TO YOU if you are contemplating the purchase of a piano.

A "Friendship" Excursion, From Boston to the Pacific Republics of South America

Why Wouldn't This Be the Way for Boston to Get Ready for the Opening of the Panama Canal? The AMERICAN Believes It Would Be the BEST WAY POSSIBLE, Especially if Excursions Might Be Arranged Under the Auspices of the CHAMBER OF COMMERCE.

Before very long now we shall begin to read MORE AND MORE, in the newspapers and the magazines, ABOUT THE PANAMA CANAL.

The canal is all but completed. The dream of nations is all but realized.

While the formal opening of the canal will not take place before January 1, 1915, the connecting link between the Atlantic and the Pacific will be in actual operation MUCH EARLIER.

For the second time within a year the attention of Boston and New England has been called to these facts by Mr. John Barrett, the director-general of the Pan-American Union. Boston and New England owe Mr. Barrett A DEBT OF GRATITUDE.

Considerably more than one month ago the AMERICAN advised the leaders of Boston and New England to go after the pennant in the great world-league of business.

And, as Mr. Barrett well said the other night at the City Club: "If Boston put half as much courage and spirit into studying conditions in South America as it has used in winning the baseball championship of the world, this city would be the COMMERCIAL CHAMPION OF THE UNIVERSE.

"THE FUTURE OF THIS COUNTRY DEPENDS UPON GETTING READY FOR THE PANAMA CANAL AND THE LATIN-AMERICAN COUNTRIES THROUGH AND BEYOND IT."

The average Yankee—to designate the native of the United States from the other Americans of North and South America—knows almost as little about South America and the South Americans as he knows about the blonde Eskimos and THEIR country.

This ignorance of our neighbors is worse than mere indifference.

Take Argentina, for instance.

We say "take Argentina," because here lately you must have seen that Mr. Soanso, the political orator, had said that if there were no duty on beef products we should be importing beef from the ARGENTINE REPUBLIC, and pretty soon there would be NO BEEF TRUST.

Where IS Argentina? How much do our young readers KNOW about Argentina?

We know many grown-ups who have a hazy idea that Argentina lies away off to the SOUTHWEST of us, that Buenos Aires—"Good Air"—is its capital, and—that is about all.

And yet no city in the United States is the equal of Buenos Aires in COMPLETENESS. Travelers call this Argentine capital "one of the wonders of the American world."

Argentina is ONE-THIRD THE SIZE OF THE UNITED STATES. Its area is equal to that of all our States east of the Mississippi River, with Iowa, Minnesota and both the Dakotas thrown in.

Most of us, when we paint a mental picture of what South America must be like, THINK OF THE EQUATOR and begin to perspire.

If we cared as much about the republicans to the south of us as we OUGHT to care about our neighbors, we would know that Buenos Aires is as far south from the equator AS LOS ANGELES IS NORTH, and as far east of a line drawn through the city of Washington as the VERY CENTRE OF NEWFOUNDLAND. We would also know that the coast line of the Argentine—from Buenos Aires to Terra del Fuego—measures 1,615 miles, or only about 200 miles less than the distance from Portland, Maine, to Key West, Florida.

The Director-General of the Pan-American Union does well to again advise Boston to bestir itself. The AMERICAN feels sure that the Boston Chamber of Commerce will do EVERYTHING POSSIBLE to arouse this community to the IMPORTANCE OF ITS GREAT OPPORTUNITY.

The Republics of Colombia, Ecuador, Bolivia, Peru and Chile, now isolated by the lofty Andes, are soon to be opened to New England business by the opening of the canal. Our young people, and our young business men, should acquaint themselves with the history and the geography of these republics. New England might well be dropping some of the educational fads of the day for the STUDY OF THE SPANISH LANGUAGE.

The AMERICAN would be glad to print the announcement of not one but several POPULAR excursions—preferably under the auspices of the Boston Chamber of Commerce—to these South Pacific Republics.

And we should call them "FRIENDSHIP" excursions. For wherever representatives of the Boston Chamber of Commerce travel, in the name of Boston and their vigorous Chamber, Boston is certain to be well and favorably advertised. We submit the suggestion to the able young leaders of the Chamber, assuring them of the support of this newspaper and its readers.

WE seem, to the South American, to be a material-minded people, bent on MAKING MONEY. The South American whom YOU would like to know is intellectual. As Mr. Barrett has pointed out more than once, we have not appreciated and studied the South American peoples, their governments, habits, and customs, as they have deserved. Instead of OUR mastering Spanish, Portuguese and French, we have expected THEM to understand OUR English.

Mr. John Barrett, by the way, is not the first Yankee—Mr. Barrett is a native of Grafton, Vermont, a graduate of Worcester Academy, '84, and an alumnus of Dartmouth, '88—who has devoted himself with commendable zeal and great ability to South America.

When you visit Chile, as a "Friendship" excursionist, you will see in the public plaza of Valparaiso a grand statue in honor of William Wheelwright of Newburyport, Massachusetts. And in practically every library in South America you are likely to find a decidedly inspiring book called "La Vida y los Trabajos Industriales de William Wheelwright, en la America del Sud."

Wheelwright is the genius who established a line of steamers between Europe and the Pacific Coast of South America. He was born at Newburyport when John Adams was President and Thomas Jefferson Vice-President. At the age of nine, in 1807, he witnessed the first trip of Fulton's little steamboat on the Hudson. When he was twenty-five he commanded the Rising Empire, bound for Buenos Aires.

He had reached the broad estuary of the river La Plata when the ship was wrecked and became a total loss.

Like a new Hernando Cortes, as we are told, William Wheelwright remained in the land of his shipwreck in order to conquer its soil, NOT BY ARMS, BUT BY STEAM; not for Spain, but for CIVILIZATION.

Of course they thought Wheelwright's talk of a steamship line from Chile around the Horn to Europe the talk of a VISIONARY.

He received ABOUT as much encouragement, IN THE BEGINNING, as Morse received at Washington when he talked electric telegraph to STATESMEN. About as much, that is to say, as Bell received here in Boston, IN THE BEGINNING, when he sought to capitalize his invention of the TELEPHONE.

The British Minister to Peru told his servants to deny admission to "that INSANE WHEELWRIGHT." The boys in the streets of Lima HOOTED AT HIM.

But Wheelwright persevered. And when he steamed into the harbor of Valparaiso—the Valley of Paradise—with his steamships Chile and Peru, all the way from Southampton, the military bands were there on launches to greet him and 4,000 cheering Chilians were gathered on the hills.

We suppose every boy in Newburyport knows ALL ABOUT WILLIAM WHEELWRIGHT. We should be surprised if there is not a book or two about him in the library of Phillips Academy at Andover. We advise our young readers to learn more about Wheelwright than we can tell them here.

If we are going to revive the GREAT NEW ENGLAND SUCCESSES OF ONE HUNDRED YEARS AGO, we shall have to develop MORE WHEELWRIGHTS. It is not too early to be thinking about it.

One of the things that Boston must do is establish a line of steamships to South American ports. Mr. Barrett recommends THREE lines. We learn that more business men leave Buenos Aires in ONE WEEK, on the fast and elegant EUROPEAN steamers, than come to the United States in A WHOLE YEAR on the SLOW-GOING VESSELS that travel THIS way. This is said to be true of Rio de Janeiro, also.

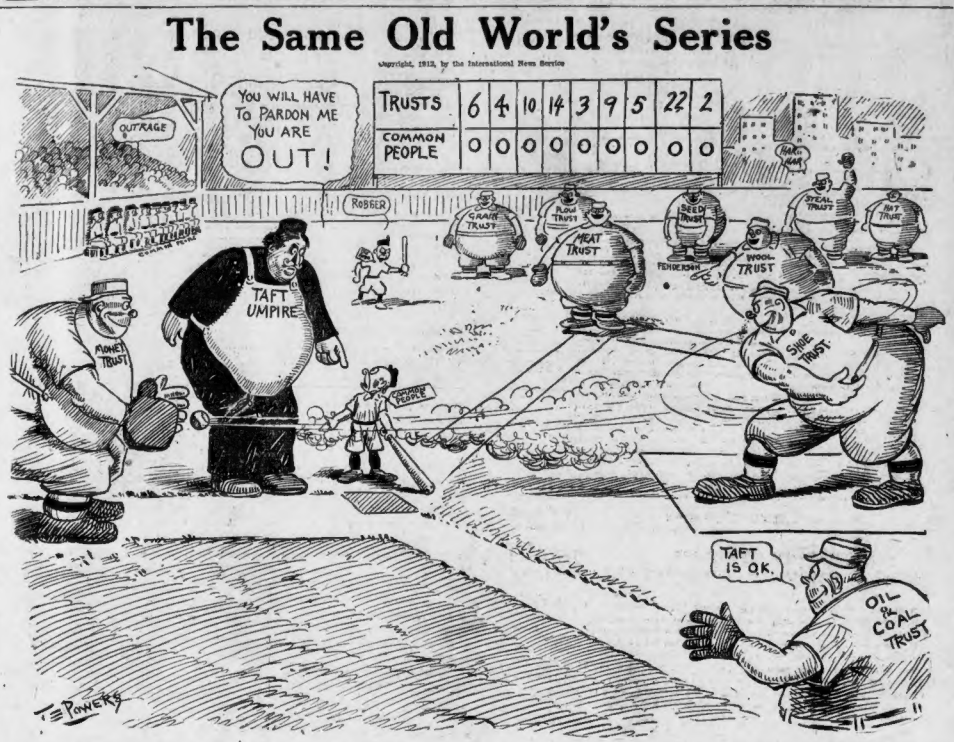
Well may Mr. John Barrett ask if Chicago could hold its present position if it were reached ONLY BY FREIGHT TRAINS.

We are told that the natives of Buenos Aires like to have their beautiful city called "LITTLE PARIS."

If Boston is wise—and if her big business men are not only alert but kindly and thoughtful and PATIENT—it may not be many years before one of the great and growing cities of the South Pacific, in the "Land of Tomorrow," will rejoice in the name of "LITTLE BOSTON."

At all events, resolve today to know more about our neighbors of South America, soon to be, if we wish it, more our neighbors than ever before.

The Same Old World's Series



Conservation of Life, Limb and Natural Resources

Seventh Article Written for the Boston American by George W. Perkins

WHEN the idea of conserving natural resources such as forests, streams, coal, etc., was first advanced a great many people scoffed at it. Now practically every one realizes its great importance.

In addition to the above sort of conservation, the Progressive party is strongly advocating social and industrial justice, which is another name for the conservation of human health and life. It is also advocating the adoption of such measures as will promote individual and collective efficiency among our people. Deep interest is already being shown in this form of conservation.

The Republican and Democratic parties seem to ignore it entirely, both in their platforms and on the stump; but the people are not ignoring it; they are solidly behind the Progressive party in its advocacy of the conservation of life and limb.

In a few words, the Progressive doctrine on this subject is this: that we as a people, because of our educational advantages, have reached a point of intelligence where we are beginning to realize keenly that it is for the best interests of one and all that a higher order of social and industrial justice should prevail; that the man or woman who goes to his work without enough sleep, without enough food, without a real interest in what he is about to do can not be efficient—cannot do justice to his own efforts—cannot do justice to the business that is employing him; that it is false economy on the part of any business to allow such conditions to prevail among its employes.

Some of us have been working, where we could, to make the tool users tool owners; working to induce business enterprises to adopt profit-sharing, sick benefit and old-age pension plans; working for improved conditions in mills and factories where thousands of people are laboring every day; and we have come to realize that we cannot make the progress that should be made until there are national laws on this subject—laws that will compel short-sighted concerns, who take no stock in this sort of thing, to wake up and realize that such a policy is for their best interests, be community's best interests and the workers' best interests.

One, two or a dozen enterprises can go only a certain distance in promoting industrial justice; for, when a large number of other concerns refuse to take it up, a general condition has been reached where something of a definite nature must be done in the way of laws and regulations.

This something cannot be done by individual States. It must be done by the Federal government, and it is right here that the Democratic party falls down and goes to pieces, for it is still harking back to State's Rights—trying to preserve antiquated notions about State lines in commerce—lines that the telephone and the telegraph, the steam engine and the automobile have wiped off the map, for all practical purposes.

It is up to you to look this phase of the campaign straight in the face. Study it—see what the platforms of the Democratic party and the Progressive party declare for—listen to what the candidates are saying on the subject—make up your mind—and vote accordingly, regardless of the party with which you previously have been affiliated.

Many Opportunities For Women Who Possess Executive Ability

Special Announcement to Women Who Earn Money at Home

One Dollar will be paid for every letter contributed by Boston AMERICAN readers, and used in the AMERICAN, containing ideas helpful to these WOMEN WHO WISH TO EARN MONEY AT HOME. This department is organized to help women help themselves. It will suggest opportunities for money-making and will help those who wish to develop the ideas they are now using in their homes for increasing their incomes. Won't you please tell me what you are doing and why you are doing it, so that we may be of service to some woman who is struggling in the dark and who needs our help? Address MABEL BARCLAY URY, Boston AMERICAN.

This Department Will Appear in the Daily and Sunday AMERICAN

By MABEL BARCLAY URY

It is absolutely certain that the woman who has managerial ability can make more money than one who has none. No man becomes a millionaire through his own efforts. It is only by organizing and wisely directing the work of many helpers that great fortunes are made.

From Manchester, N. H., comes a letter from a woman with this ability. Doubtless there are some who are earning money in much the same way.

Her letter is printed here because what she offers may be helpful to you. Perhaps you have the ability to wisely direct the work of others. Perhaps there are scores of women in your town who are in need of the work you are able to secure for them.

Many a woman is capable of doing work efficiently but lacks the ability to find work and dispose of her product. Perhaps you can both find work and dispose of the product created by others. If you are this kind of a woman you will be interested in this letter.

Found Work for Others.

During the first years of my married life every moment of my time was occupied with caring for my home and children, but when the youngest of the three reached school age I found myself with more time on my hands and an intense desire to help my husband to pay for the home we had built.

I tried various ways of earning money in my few spare hours, but the most satisfactory in every way was the following:

I wrote to a firm in a neighboring city who manufactured sleeve trimmings, little chiffon rosettes, beaded buckles, etc., that ornament ladies' slippers. As this work must be done by hand and is necessarily slow to do, it is sent out for women to do at home rather than in the factory. I obtained the agency for my home town and put a card in the local paper asking for home workers. The response I received show what a pitiful demand existed for such work.

I soon had fifty women working for me. I reserved two afternoons each week to give out the work, and one evening in each week my husband helped me to box and ship the finished work. Once a week I received from the firm a check for the work I had returned, and paid each woman for what she had done, reserving my commission. The manufacturers fixed both the price for the work and the commission. The pay was not large, but the work was pleasant, did not take too much time, and the money was an appreciable help. Moreover, I had the satisfaction of knowing I was helping a good many other women to make a little pin money.

Writes Jokes.

I write an occasional anecdote, or joke or editorial and am paid from $1.00 to $2.50 or $3.00 for these. It is fascinating work and if one keeps his eyes open, he learns much that will make amusing reading, which newspapers and magazine editors hunger for. So I earn from $7.00 to $15.00 weekly at home after housework is done.

Makes Willow Plumes.

Last year I made me a willow plume from an old ostrich feather that I didn't wear any more. My success was perfect and I have been making willow plumes for my friends. Each plume gives me $5, or $6 clear money and I think it is very pleasant work.
